Thousands of Soviet trucks carrying coal, firewood and arms began pouring into Afghanistan today as the 15-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting in Brussels reached broad agreement on measures to retaliate against Russia until it removes its military forces.

The trucks rolled over pontoon bridges today in a massive effort to provision Russian invasion troops for a winter stay, Moslem rebels said.

Rebel leaders near Pakistan's border with Afghanistan said the Russians put up pontoon bridges at the river port of Hairatan over the Amu River on the Afghan-Soviet border.

Thousands of trucks started rolling last week across the bridges into Afghanistan, carrying huge amounts of coal, firewood and other winter supplies necessary to keep an army warm in the harsh Afghan climate.

Most of the trucks have been covered, however, and the rebels say they suspect some are carrying arms and ammunition for the estimated 85,000 Soviet invasion troops and 56,000 Afghan government forces fighting Moslem guerrillas.

In Brussels, a strong consensus quickly emerged at a four-hour special session of the NATO permanent council for tougher and more concerted reprisals against Moscow than had seemed likely even a week ago.

It was decided to restrict credits, subsidies, agricultural shipments, high technology exports and cultural and official contacts with the Russians, with even the French going along with the general NATO approach.

At the same time, foreign ministers attending their regular monthly meeting of the European Common Market issued a statement condemning the Soviet Union for "flagrant interference in the internal affairs" of Afghanistan and rejected Moscow's explanation of its invasion there.

Moreover, at least half a dozen NATO delegates at the meeting also said that they were prepared to consider seeing what could be done to move the 1980 Olympic Games out of Moscow. This, too, looked like a non-starter in Europe a week ago, but both public and government opinion are hardening against the Soviets.

Detailed discussions will take place in the next few days, primarily in Paris, to complete a new upgrading of the so-called "Cocom list" of prohibited exports to the Soviet Union. The list has existed since around 1951, but has been progressively relaxed in this past decade of detente. Now many items, such as sophisticated computers and high technology industrial equipment will be put back on.

In Washington, the administration is discussing several proposals to deny Moscow the Olympic Games.

The New York Daily News reported in today's editions the United States' first choice was to have the Games moved out of Moscow. The News reported that if that failed, officials said the United States was willing to subsidize "counter-Olympics" elsewhere, possibly Montreal.

But in New York today, the president of the U.S. Olympic Committee said that the United States should look for alternatives to a Games boycott.

The comments by committee president Robert Kane followed a New York Times interview in which State Sec-

Nuclear war threat triggers worry here

The growing tension between the U.S. and the Soviet Union over Afghanistan has triggered a rash of calls to emergency planners from Victorians worried that the worsening international situation could mean a nuclear war.

A spokesman for Emergency Planning Canada at 816 Government says about a half-dozen calls a day are coming in from people who want to know what to do in case of nuclear war.

Pamphlets containing information on what to do in the event of war are available from the EPC office.

But this morning, the principal publication, 11 Steps to Survival, was out of stock.

"We've asked the provincial emergency people for some," the spokesman said.

"We should have them by this afternoon."

It appears that Victorians aren't the only people anxious for information.

While there isn't mass panic across the nation, the demand for data is steady across the country.

In Winnipeg for example, Nels Stavenjord, deputy co-ordinator of the Manitoba Emergency Measures Organization, says his group has been getting 10 to 12 requests a day from people worried about what to do.

As a result, he has been mailing out pamphlets dealing with nuclear attack "like they were going out of style."

He said most of the callers appear to be mothers with young children, judging from the noise in the background.

The EPC people here will on request mail you the survival book as well as a publication on how to build a basement fallout shelter.

Khomeini switches on Waldheim: ABC

Times News Services

Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has agreed to allow UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim to mediate the hostage situation in Tehran, ABC News has reported.

The report Tuesday, citing informed sources at the United Nations, said Khomeini has sent a message through Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh stating Iran would now accept Waldheim as an intermediary.

But UN sources told UPI Waldheim had not received any communications from Iran since Sunday.

Earlier this month, Khomeini refused to see Waldheim when the secretary-general visited Iran in an effort to resolve in the crisis. The ABC report did not say what changed Khomeini's mind.

UN officials admit there have been a lot of conflicting signals from Iran, "but (they) feel this one is serious," ABC said.

Although Khomeini would not see Waldheim and Iranian militants denounced him a U.S. tool, the Iranians "now seem ready to talk to Waldheim," the ABC report said.

Meanwhile, Iranian Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinfar said today Iran is prepared to drop its oil production to as little as 1.5 million barrels a day, about half the current output, if Western Europe and Japan join in economic sanctions against [illegible]

Tories pour oil on fears

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — Progressive Conservative campaign strategists jumped into action Tuesday to prevent potential damage from statements by Finance Minister John Crosbie that oil prices could rise even higher this year than was earlier announced.

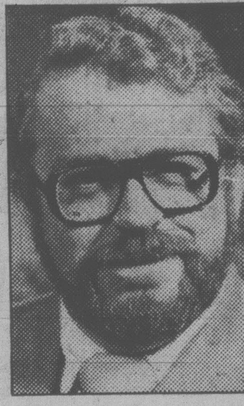
News of Crosbie's statement, published Tuesday in an interview with the Montreal Gazette, reached Prime Minister Clark's campaign bus during a tour of southern Ontario's Niagara peninsula, a region where Conservative energy policies already are considered unpopular and could give the party difficulty at the polls Feb. 18.

"I'm not contemplating an increase in oil prices," Clark said later.

Today in Newfoundland, Crosbie said he agrees with Clark on oil price increases.

"We're cheek to cheek, toe to toe, eye to eye and bum to bum on oil prices," Crosbie said in an interview from Gander where he was attending a Progressive Conservative meeting.

Rafe's legal at last



MAIR
. . . no longer Ralph

Health Minister Rafe Mair has finally decided to go honest and change his name to Rafe Mair.

For all his 52 years, he has legally been a Ralph, not a Rafe.

Mair explains: "I was christened Kenneth Ralph, but the Ralph is pronounced Rafe, as they do in England and Scotland. For example, Sir Ralph Richardson, the actor, pronounces his name Rafe.

"When I went to school the teachers all called me Ralph and I'd been used to being called Rafe. So I marched home and announed to my mother I had changed the spelling to R-a-f-e."

This week Mair began the process of changing the spelling legally.

He says he had wanted to do it for years and was reminded of it when he was familiarizing himself with the Vital Statistics department of his new ministry.

"I've always felt more of a Rafe than a Ralph," he says. "Ralph is the sound dogs make."

Mair says all his life, including the past four years as a cabinet minister, he's been signing documents with the signature, K. Rafe Mair.

But he says that isn't illegal, "as long as I'm not trying to pass myself off as something I'm not."

'They didn't do a thing'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A single phone call on Christmas Day could have saved the 30 Taiwanese crew members on board the freighter Lee Wang Zin, a marine pilot said Tuesday.

Capt. Bob Fisher told a coroner's inquest that the Canadian Coast Guard could have plotted the freighter's position if it had phoned the Pacific Pilotage Authority in Vancouver for its course and speed as soon as the S O S was received. He was the last man to leave the freighter before it capsized in a fierce storm off the north tip of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

But, three hours after the S O S, the coast guard was still trying to locate the vessel, Fisher said.

"They didn't phone me. I finally phoned them. They didn't do a thing. They wound up with a salvage operation."

Fisher said he first heard the Lee Wang Zin was in trouble at 10:30 Christmas morning, 73 minutes after the distress call was radioed. He immediately phoned the coast guard for information, and told them to look for the ship near Rose Spit at the northeast corner of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

He was told rescue helicopters were being sent from Juneau, Alaska, and Victoria.

"That was another unbelievable thing because of the distances involved," he said.

Fisher said he phoned the coast guard again at 11:30 a.m. and was told a helicopter was en route from Prince Rupert, about 50 kilometres east of the capsized ship.

Coroner Hal Murphy, who described Fisher as "the last living survivor of that ship" asked him if he had a personal opinion why the ship capsized.

"No I don't," he replied. "None whatsoever."

The coast guard's preliminary inquiry determined the most probable cause of the disaster was that the Lee Wang Zin hit Celestial Reef in Dixon Entrace, was holed port and starboard and took on water, causing her to suddenly turn turtle.

Gold going crazy

Gold rocketed through the $700 barrier in Europe today in an "absolutely crazy" market opening at $735 and later surged to $765 ($887 Canadian) at the London morning gold fixing as the price leap-frogged around the world.

Gold earlier hit record levels in New York, Hong Kong and Zurich but the London morning fixing of $765 eclipsed them all. It was an increase of $78 from the London closing price on Tuesday.

The price of gold is "fixed" each morning and afternoon in London by a meeting of the five principal dealers who gather to set a price on gold.

"Trading is hectic. We are rushed off our feet. Little time to talk," a dealer for broker Samuel Montague said.

The spectacular leap was attributed to a comment by U.S. Treasury Secretary William Miller that further U.S. gold auctions were not appropriate at the moment because of the unsettled bullion market. Traders interpreted this as a squeeze on already tight supplies of gold.

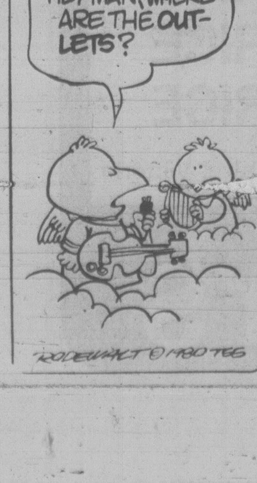
Lottery tickets foil sneaky x-ray peeks



THE BYRDS
HEY MAN, WHERE ARE THE OUT-LETS?
RODEWALT © 1980 TGS

X-raying lottery tickets to pick out instant prizes may work in England but the technique draws a blank with Provincial lottery tickets.

According to U.K. scientist Duncan Stewart, rigging a lottery win is easy with a little scientific knowledge, including the use of x-rays to [illegible] instant-prize tickets through their protective seal.

The Times borrowed the services of a friendly technician Tuesday to x-ray a Provincial ticket which contains a scratch-and-win type patch which can pay off with prizes ranging from $5 to $1,000.

The x-ray showed zilch.

The scratch patch remained blank on the film. There wasn't even a trace of what might lie underneath.

Stewart, a physicist with the Fulmer Research Institute in Buckinghamshire, said chemicals applied to tickets may also reveal hidden numbers.

Stewart conducted tests involving security measures for 20 U.K. lotteries, prompting the government to tighten up its system.

"With a little expense, time, trouble and knowledge, anyone can check through a batch of tickets and pick out the winners before they are sold," Stewart claimed.

But not, apparently, with the Provincial.

Guy Simonis, general manager of the Western Canada Lottery Foundation in Winnipeg, told the Times today Provincial tickets have been exposed to x-rays, laser beams and a wide variety of chemicals without success.

He said the tickets are printed by the British American Bank Note Co., printers of currency for countries around the world.

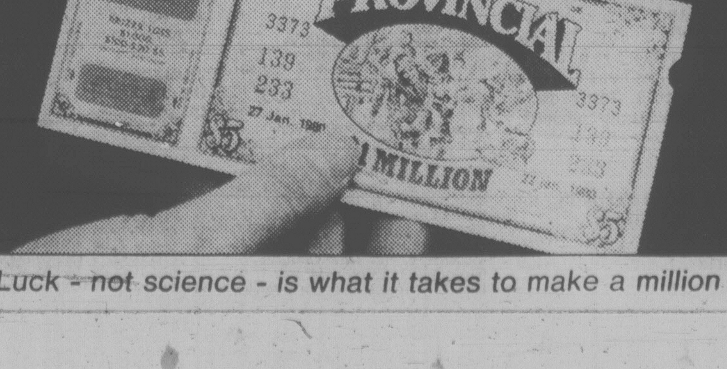
In addition to that company's expertise in foiling counterfeiters, a forensic sciences laboratory in Toronto turned what Simonis termed "a number of honest people with crooked minds" loose on the instant prize patches.

They failed to come up with a simple method of cheating the system, but they did theorize that it would be possible, after expending about $500,000 on equipment, to scratch the protective paint off the hidden message and then print it back on.

But you'd still have to buy a lot of tickets.

The moral?

It's a lot easier being lucky than it is to be crooked.



Luck - not science - is what it takes to make a million

Rail talk breakoff explanation due

Negotiators for the B.C. Railway and the Joint Council of Rail Unions have been called back to Victoria to explain to Labor Minister Jack Heinrich why talks aimed at ending a strike which began 29 days ago broke down again Tuesday.

Heinrich said he wants a first-hand report on the breakdown so he can determine how to get the talks back on track.

Negotiators for the Crown-owned railway said the joint council prompted the stalemate by baragining in bad faith and trying to get everything it can out of the company. The unions said the railway is trying to split the seven-member council over the manning issue.

The railway wants to reduce trainmen's crews to three from four but has offered to shelve the manning issue until after a contract is signed if the 2,200 employees will go back to work. The unions say the crew reduction would endanger safety and insist the issue be settled before the railway resumes operations.

This will be the second time the two sides have been called to Heinrich's office. The last meeting produced the talks which broke down Tuesday.

Heinrich is under increasing pressure from mayors in 10 northern communities, Social Credit MLAs and foresty officials to invoke the Essential Services Disputes Act and end the strike which has cut off an economic lifeline for the forest industry in northeastern B.C.

Fort Nelson Mayor Doug MacPahil told Heinrich earlier this week that if the trains are not running soon, Fort Nelson might cease to exist.

"This is how serious it is," he said. "We have 500 people out of work, the people are leaving town."

The minister says he has a basic philosophical objection to complusory arbitration and will invoke the legislation only if he is convinced both parties are not bargaining in good faith.

Obscenity charge laid

VANCOUVER (CP) — A West Vancouver man has been charged with making obscene telephone calls and impersonating a police officer.

Peter Jon McLean, a 31-year-old sales clerk, faces seven counts of making obscene telephone calls to women between Nov. 1 and Dec. 31, 1979, and 16 counts of impersonating a policeman.

The charges were laid after a number of women complained of receiving early-morning phone calls from a man claiming to be police offcer David Jamieson. Vancouver police said there was no such person on the force.

The caller allegedly told each woman she would receive an obscene phone call in a few minutes.

He asked her to let the obscene caller talk for up to 12 minutes while police traced the call. He would then hang up and dial back as the obscene caller.

McLean is to appear in provincial court Feb. 20.

Airlines seek fare hike

EDMONTON (CP) — Air Canada, CP Air and Pacific Western Airlines have asked the Canadian Transport Commission to approve a general fare increase on domestic flights.

Air Canada and CP Air want the rate increases to take effect March 1. A PWA spokesman said the regional air line, owned by the Alberta government, would put the increase into effect "possibly in March."

Sales directors at Air Canada and CP Air said the increases sought by the two major air lines would average 9.5 per cent. Bob Bancroft, transport commission tariff officer, said the PWA increase would average 10 per cent.

If approved the increase would raise the price of a round-trip, economy flight from Edmonton to Calgary by about $7, to Vancouver by about $15, to Winnipeg by about $20 and to Toronto by about $35.

All three air lines said the increase is needed to meet higher fuel and operating costs.

Health woes, bad luck plague Tory campaign

OTTAWA — To be good you also have to be lucky and Joe Clark, who needs all the help he can get, hasn't been getting much.

If the Tories are losing this election, as they seem to be, it's partly because they can't get their best troops out front.

To someone who's been out roaming the land, there isn't the general revulsion to John Crosbie's budget that the Liberals would have you think. There was a growing realization that gas prices had to go up and it was time Ottawa took some tough decisions.

What was needed, however, to drive in that message immediately after the government fell on Dec. 13 was the driving presence of the most attractive politician in Canada today — John Crosbie.

The rollocking, highly-partisan "millionaire in mukluks" on the platform before businessmen in Toronto and Vancouver and waypoints — that's what the Tories needed early on to sock home the case for the budget.

Instead? Bad luck. Crosbie went into the hospital with a kidney stone problem and, while the party held its breath, had to suffer the additional humiliation of the nation watching to determine if the burly Newfie could navigate the bothersome stone through the tortuous routes.

He's up and out on the trial now, but not quite in the finest Crosbie form.

(Crosbie is a workaholic, always has been since university, and a chill went through the Tories when a profile on Crosbie just before the budget revealed for the first time for general knowledge that he had suffered a stroke last January.)

Health? Probably the second best platform performer in the country next to Crosbie is David Crombie. The tiny perfect one has a natural feel for an audience, is witty and generally exudes a feeling of casual joy in the whole political process — an attitude that may have been a disguise for the tensions that brought on his heart attack before Christmas.

It's now being admitted that the attack was far more serious than first conceded and it's unlikely Crosbie will be able to campaign at all.

That won't affect his winning his Toronto-Rosedale seat (his hold on that can be indicated by the fact that Donald Macdonald, before being double-crossed by the shifty ones around Trudeau, wasn't going to attempt his comeback in his old Rosedale [illegible]) But it does remove Crosbie as a very useful Clark weapon.

Clark, by the way, was so concerned about the fatigue factor of his inexperienced and naively-idealistic cabinet ministers that he had ordered all of them to disappear for two weeks at Christmas. That was, of course, before the botched night of Dec. 13.

Next? One of the most impressive figures in the Tory apparatus is The Godmother: Jean Pigott, the stately lady in charge of patronage appointments.

A successful business-woman, she would have been valuable out on the stump selling the Crosbie brand of bad medicine across the land.

Instead, the Tory strategists have pushed the reluctant Pigott back into the political ring. They knew she couldn't beat Jean-Luc Pepin in Ottawa-Carleton with its significant Francophone vote, but have put her into a risky battle against aggressive young Liberal incumbent John Evans in Ottawa Centre.

What it means is that Pigott has to stick close to home and her abilities as a defender of Clark are lost on the national campaign.

Luck? The most peripatetic Tory premier in the country, New Brunswick's Dick Hatfield, fell at his home over the holiday and broke his leg. Hatfield, who will travel anywhere at the sight of a platform (to Morocco if not Montreal) has his mobility restricted.

Alberta's Peter Lougheed, who could help Clark if he wanted to, has opted for Switzerland instead.

Ontario's Bill Davis, his cigar getting its annual sun tan in Florida, won't officially get back into the fray until Jan. 21 with less than a month to go in the campaign.

Ontario Liberal leader Stuart Smith, getting nasty, now refers to Clark and Davis as "The Wimp and The Blimp," an indication that Smith is apparently shucking his psychiatrist background and is getting down in the bar-room with everyone else.

The point is that the Tories — while the Liberals campaign on their non-existent "team" — have a far better front-line troupe to parade before the electorate.

The only problem is with sufficient band-aids, crutches and oxygen to get them on view.

RCMP blamed for jail injury

RICHMOND, B.C. (CP) — A Vancouver man who underwent surgery for a ruptured spleen after being held by Richmond RCMP says he suffered the injury when he was assaulted by a policeman.

Richmond RCMP said Tuesday they are investigating the charge that a chair was pulled out from under breaking and entering suspect Garry Konopski during interrogation Thursday, causing him to fall heavily to the floor.

Doctors who examined Konopski early the following morning found he had suffered a ruptured spleen and heavy internal bleeding. The spleen was removed in surgery and Konopski is recuperating at Richmond General Hospital.

Surgeon Dr. Michael Frimer said Tuesday that Konopski had at least 1,000 cubic centimetres (about 1.5 pints) of blood in his abdominal cavity when admitted.

"It's hard to say how long it would have taken, but if remained untreated there's no doubt he would have died," Dr. Frimer said.

Konopski, 20, has been charged along with Alvin George Johnston, 17, of Vancouver, with breaking and entering. They are scheduled to appear in Richmond provincial court Jan. 23.

Insp. Ernest Greba said a Richmond RCMP officer is investigating the incident as a regular assault complaint to determine if charges should be laid.

Metrics dumped

KAMLOOPS (CP) — At least two supermarkets in this central B.C. city are taking their Imperial scales and measures out of storage following a federal government pledge to consider reimbursing merchants for a six-month experiment with the metric system.

Cooper's Grocery store will ban the kilogram and revert to the pound today, said manager Rick Laidlaw, who estimates the store spent about $30,000 on metric scales.

Kamloops, Peterborough, Ont. and Sherbrooke, Que. were test cities for mandatory metric conversion in the retail food markets until December when Small Business Minister Ron Huntington scrapped the program which was due to spread across Canada by the end of 1981.

Huntington said Tuesday he is considering reimbursing merchants who changed their scales to metric if they have not already used the cost as a tax deduction.

"The Progressive Conservative cabinet in Ottawa is sympathetic to those merchants caught in the cost of changing scales in three area where the mandatory aspects (of metric conversion) were implemented," he said.

"We're not dealing with compensation for loss of business, but the cost of scale conversion: We were made aware that merchants had to go to an expense; we don't think it fair that they be left with that conversion cost."

Woodwards department store is also switching its Kamloops operation back to Imperial measurements, but M. P. McBride, general merchandise manager of foods, said he was not happy about the switch.

"It's too bad they didn't carry on. We were just getting them (consumers) trained," he said.

'Hot' water no problem for Atlin

The community water supply for the village of Atlin in northwestern B.C. does not have excessive or dangerous levels of radioactivity, Health Minister Rafe Mair said in Victoria Tuesday.

The ministry has measured uranium and radium concentrations in 20 samples from the area and "all are within stringent federal guidelines," he said.

Al Passarell (NDP—Atlin) had expressed concern about the local water supplies after a B.C. uranium mining probe was told that Atlin's water supply showed high levels of radiation.

$17M heroin case begins

SURREY, B.C. (CP) — A Thailand native, charged with importing $17 million worth of heroin, was remanded in custody until Friday when he appeared in court Tuesday.

Tamanoon Jawanviroj, 33, of Bangkok is charged with importing heroin and possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

Jawanviroj was charged after RCMP seized five pounds of high-quality heroin in a raid on a Vancouver hotel room Jan. 6.

Police said the drug was destined for the Vancouver market, and was smuggled in a suitcase on a flight Jan. 2 from Bangkok.

Jawanviroj was one of six Thailand natives arrested in in a joint investigation by RCMP and U.S. drug enforcement officers. The other five suspects were arrested in Los Angeles after police seized 2½ ponds of heroin.

RCMP said charges against Jawanviroj were processed in Surrey, a municipality southeast of Vancouver, to avoid publicity which might have damaged an ongoing investigation. They did not elaborate.

Better, not less

One of the most intelligent comments made in recent months about the country's state of anti-government, anti-bureaucracy, anti-red tape feeling came last week from the Institute for Research on Public Policy.

The institute's head, Michael Kirby, said that although the phrase "less government" has become the catchword for the anti-government movement, it isn't really less government that the public wants. Rather, it wants better and more efficient government.

The institute's studies show that even those most critical of government want the services provided by government to continue, said Kirby.

It's true. Even those who talk at length about excessive taxation and overregulation still want their streets paved, their hospitals supported, their industries promoted. And virtually everyone wants the government to continue helping those who cannot help themselves — the poor, the aged, the sick.

They just want the government to do it without waste, extravagance, and inefficiency.

Kirby says governments can find ways to provide the services more efficiently, but he warns it will never be done by allowing the governments themselves to grow and grow.

Rather, he says, governments at all levels should be looking at ways of obtaining services through contracting out — to private businesses, to non-profit organizations, and even to other levels of government. It's the competition inherent in the contracting out process that enhances its efficiency.

One idea, he suggests, would be for government to issue vouchers directly to consumers for the provision of government services. Businesses or non-profit groups would then spring up to provide the services, and the competition among them would keep the services efficient.

A particularly good place to begin, Kirby says, might be garbage collection. Studies have shown that the over-all costs of collection are about 70 per cent higher if the service is provided directly by the municipality rather than through a voucher system which ensures competition.

The theory is excellent, but one has to wonder just how such a system could be begun in a city like Victoria where public service unions would doubtless take strong exception to their jobs disappearing.

The next step by Kirby and his fellow-researchers should be to develop some ways that better, more efficient government could be provided within the financial and labor-relations constraints that nearly all governments face today.

Low tactics

With an issue as emotional as the future of both Quebec and Canada at stake, the campaign for the Parti Quebecois government referendum may turn out to be nasty.

All the same, it is distressing to see Quebec's vice-premier, Jacques-Yvan Morin, stoop to low tactics so early in the debate.

In an interview with a Paris newspaper recently, Morin warned that a "no" vote in the referendum might lead to an outbreak of terrorist-style violence in Quebec.

"A vote against the Quebec government in the referendum could provoke a rebirth of violence because young people have put all their hopes in the Parti Quebecois," he said.

The message is clear. Quebecers should feel bound to vote for a sovereignty-association proposal (whether they agree with it or not) because to do otherwise would be to invite back to Quebec mailbox bombings and terrorist kidnappings.

The Parti Quebecois would gain far more credibility across Canada — and with the vast majority of its own people as well — if it made clear that violence would not be tolerated in the province and that all work for changes in Canada's constitution would be conducted through entirely peaceful channels.

Many issues of great importance are at stake in the referendum campaign. They should be debated calmly and rationally. Neither [illegible] resort to subtle threats to the Quebec people to try to win its point.

Deter rather than confront

U.S. support for Afghan resistance should be indirect, say polls.

NEW YORK — President Carter is suffering some political ridicule for his remark that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan had taught him something about the Russians. Didn't he know, critics asked incredulously, sometimes gleefully, that Moscow would stoop to anything to achieve its ends? How could he have been so naive?

It may be, however, that Carter spoke for a lot of Americans, and not so naively at that. Neither he nor anyone of reasonable intelligence was likely to have thought before Afghanistan that the Russians were models of international good behavior to be trusted in any and all circumstances. No nation, including the United States, meets that description.

What was surprising and alarming about Afghanistan was not so much that the Russians staged an invasion — they have done that before — or that they did it under the cynical cover of "supporting" a government whose leader they promptly executed. Anyone of Jimmy Carter's generation was taught by events of years ago that the Soviet Union could and would behave that way, if Moscow thought it necessary or useful.

Deviation

But the Russians did not act in the 1950s or in the 1960s but a decade after Richard Nixon proclaimed "an era of negotiation." They did not invade an Eastern European country to keep it in the Communist orbit, and they moved while a strategic arms limitation treaty with the United States was pending in the Senate. The invasion took place just as the U.S. appeared to be grouping for closer relations with China and moving toward increased military spending. Nor did Moscow make its moves with Cuban surrogates or clandestine agents, but openly and with tanks, across a recognized border with an independent nation.

These brutal departures, these violations of what had been thought to be the conventions of detente, as well as of Moscow's self interest — why drive China and the U.S. closer together? Why confirm the trend to increased U.S. military spending? — are what startled Carter and many other Americans. Even those who had long warned of increasing Soviet military strength, for example, had usually predicted its employment for political "blackmail" purposes rather than its flagrant use for territorial expansion.

But to have been shocked by the Russian move is not necessarily either to understand the calculations — whether of weakness or of strength — that lay behind it, or to know what it portends. But since in this case the restraints and norms of detente were deliberately shattered, it clearly cannot be excluded that the Russians might act that way again. That fact has led, so far, mostly to discussion of what the United States should now do militarily — establish bases in the Mid East, increase the Pentagon budget, ship arms to Pakistan, unleash the CIA, and the like.

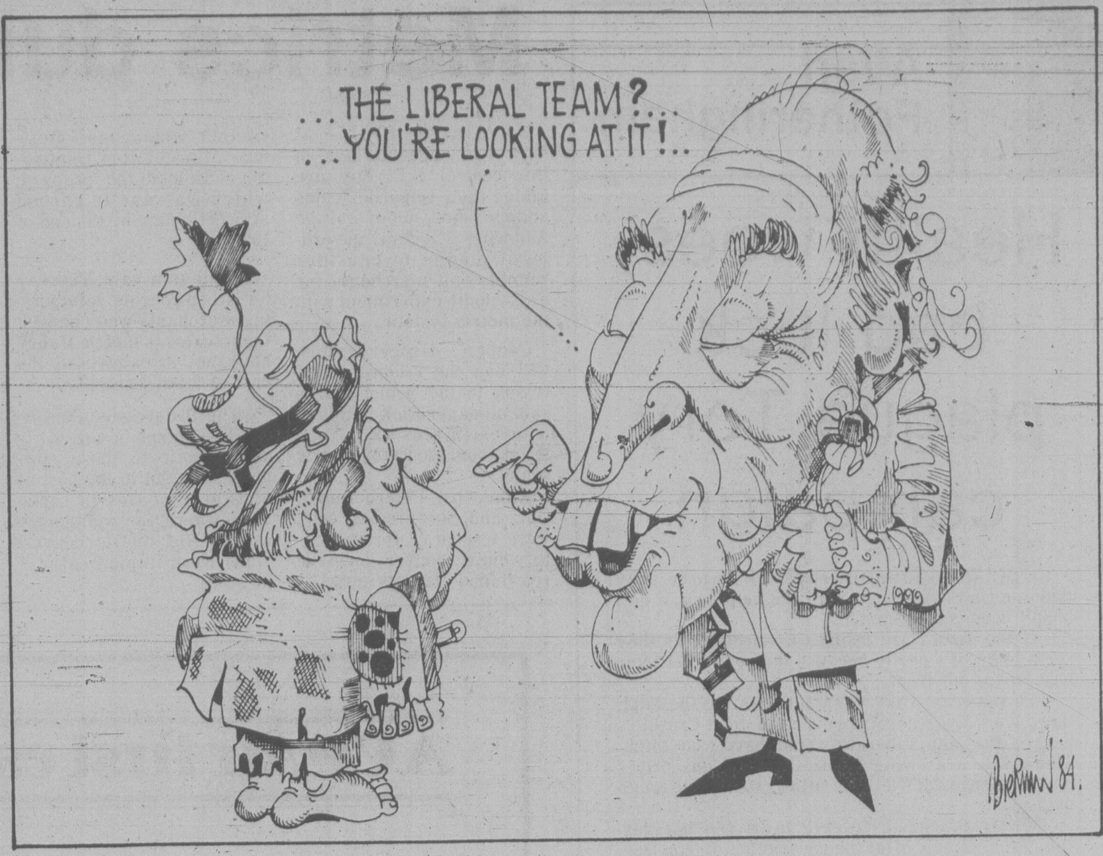
A response incorporating at least some of those steps no doubt is necessary. But the danger is that an exclusively military response is not likely to be the right answer, and could well be the worst. It could not, for example, have much effect on the fundamentalist religious tide now sweeping Islam, which is central to the crisis in Iran, and which surely played some part in the Russians' decision to move into Afghanistan. Nor would bases in the Middle East necessarily be a deterrent to, say, a Soviet attack on Yugoslavia after Marshal Tito's death — a grim possibility that some analysts believe is foreshadowed by the sledgehammer use of force in Afghanistan.

Since foreign policy ultimately rests on domestic consent, one important point is that the polls show rank-and-file Americans so far clearly in support of Carter's policy of restraint. A gallup poll taken January 4-6, after the invasion, found 2-to-1 backing for the President's handling of the Iranian crisis (after a slight drop from 77 per cent a month before to 62 per cent of those approving). Only 37 per cent of the respondents favored military action against Iran even if the hostages were harmed.

The same gallup poll found Carter leading Sen. Edward Kennedy by 51 to 37 among Democrats and 52 to 38 among independents, with 58 per cent specifically approving the president's handling of his job. Carter led Republican Ronald Reagan by 63 to 32 per cent and former President Ford by 57 to 38. Meanwhile, a Des Moines Register poll of Iowans taken January 7-9 found Carter leading Kennedy 2-to-1, with 53 per cent of all those polled (60 per cent of Democrats) supporting the president's grain embargo against the Soviet Union.

Interpretation

It might be argued that if Carter was taking more overtly military measures, the public would support them, too. Undoubtedly, support for him includes support for his plan to increase military spending, perhaps to seek a greater Middle Eastern presence. But as he constructs what is reported to be a new strategy for coping with an ominous new perception of Soviet behavior, he could reasonably interpret these figures to show rather conclusively that Americans are not clamoring for a war-like response — much less for war — in the Middle East. On this evidence, they seem not to want to meet force with force but to deter force, if possible, by making its political and economic price too high even for the Soviets to bear.



...THE LIBERAL TEAM?...
...YOU'RE LOOKING AT IT!..

RICHARD GWYN

Who will they vote against?

OTTAWA — Perhaps this has no more relevance to the outcome of the election than does one snowdrop in premature bloom to the length of our winters, but at least one Toronto taxi driver doesn't think Joe Clark is half bad.

Two of them thought that way actually, but the second one's analysis of the issues was somewhat idiosyncratic. He amazed me by saying, "Clark's quite right to push up the price of gas."

I blinked, and almost stopped breathing. Sort of like Livingstone, a journalist remember, chancing upon the lost explorer Stanley deep in the Congo. Here, sitting right beside me, was the one Canadian who actually believed in belt-tightening, restraint, taking hard decisions, looking the future in the eye and the rest of it, for himself as well as for the guy next door.

Less traffic

Then I pushed my luck and asked a follow-up question. "It's because higher prices would force a lot of cars off the road," he explained. "We cabbies wouldn't be stuck in any more traffic jams." Uh-hugh.

The first taxi-driver said, "I like Clark's line that Trudeau's election slogan is: 'Elect me and I'll quit'."

Reporters out there on the campaign trail hunting for signs we really are covering an election rather than participating in the execution of Clark, are reduced to seizing upon scraps of evidence like this.

Sure, a number of people say, "Clark wasn't given a chance." Sure quite a number of people say about the budget, many more than the Liberals counted on when they defeated it, we respect it's toughness. Sure everyone, just about, thinks Finance Minister John Crosbie is the greatest!

But overwhelmingly they say of Clark, "$'1$-5:?. Or, "Po!$1!"

The results of Liberal polls in Metro Toronto, and in that swatch of urban Ontario that Toronto affects, or infects, are so good that Liberal campaign strategists aren't telling them to their own workers, let alone to the press, out of fear that their workers would decide the election's won anyway, and quit knocking on doors.

Clark's problem isn't the polls, though. Nor is it himself, exactly. His problem is the character of Canadian elections.

We like to think of our elections as positive occasions on which we pick a new leader. Instead, they are inherently negative occasions on which we pick upon somebody. Essentially, elections function less as a contest between two or more leaders than as a kind of collective catharsis. We use them to give vent to our grievances and frustrations caused perhaps by hard economic times, and we do this by punishing, that is by voting against somebody.

We last voted positively in 1968 when we voted for Pierre Trudeau. He had the advantage then, becase we knew nothing about him.

In 1972, we voted against Pierre Trudeau. In 1974, we voted against Robert Stanfield, and against wage and price controls. In 1979, we voted against Pierre Trudeau. This time, on the evidence, we are about to vote against Clark.

Once we've made up our minds to vote against somebody, or something, we pay little heed to the person, or the policy, that we will if only by default, be voting for. Thus today, many voters who are anti-Clark and who explain their attitudes by phrases such as "He's too young," "He's too inexperienced," are the same people who voted for Clark six month ago when he was younger and less experienced. Then, they just hadn't noticed him.

Similarly, it's hard now to find people who, after saying they intend to vote against Clark, go on to say that they expect Trudeau to do better, or even that they really want Trudeau back.

This was why the first taxi driver's remarks caught my attention. He had begun to focus away from Clark and on Trudeau.

So far, this is a one-issue election. The issue is "Clark". The election will turn into a contest only if the issue turns into "Clark vs. Trudeau."

The Liberal campaign is skillful. There's no need to add that it is cynical.

Sh[illegible] limelight

Its purpose is to obliterate Trudeau from the memories of voters, so that the issue remains "Clark".

Therefore, no TV debate. As few appearances as possible. A platform fashioned out of pious generalities and designed, not to attract people to vote Liberal but to give them no reason not to vote against Clark.

It's to remind voters that Trudeau exists that Clark fires off his Trudeau jokes. By taking risks, such as appearing before the students at York University, Clark is trying to heighten the contrast between his upfront presence and Trudeau's mock-humble absence.

To ask whether this election can yet turn into a contest, is to ask therefore whether a large number of voters will decide to switch, not from voting against Clark to voting for Clark, but from voting against Clark to voting against Trudeau. Still, for that one taxi driver, there are dozens who say that Clark is a "P$(⅜!)" or a "P(-$!"

More on Trident

In reference to the letter, "Not for Canada" in the Jan. 3 Times:

Mr. Branegan gives a reasonable picture of the marketing problems of today's modern aircraft, especially new designs. He downgrades the "size of, passenger capacity of, and usage pattern" of both the Dash-7 of De Havilland Aircraft of Canada and, I assume the other aircraft he speaks of is the "Challenger" of Montreal's Canadair.

What Mr. Branegan seems to have overlooked is that these are the very features that make these Canadian aircraft desirable to the regional carriers not only of Canada but, many foreign countries as well, thus helping out the balance of payments situation. Mr. Branegan is correct in stating that Air Canada and CP Air have no need for the Dash-7 type of aircraft, but, then again these are large national carriers with long distance routes not suitable to these designs.

Canadair's Challenger is only now going into production. If one judges the market for this type of aircraft by the success of Cessna's Citation three models and Bill Lear's famous Lear Jets, one then comes to the conclusion that the market is vast when we look beyond our own borders. The only problem I see is the lack of a vigorous marketing program.

The Trident people working to produce the Trigull locally have worked very hard to produce an apparently very good aircraft. Only actual production models will tell us how good they really are.

Similar concepts to those of Mr. Branegan have been responsible for the demise of many good sound projects such as the Avro Arrow and the east coasts hydrofoil. The DF 100 was ten years ahead of its time and died only to be copied by the Americans and the British.

Let us not be copiers of Douglas Canada and other safe operations producing wings for DC-9 and DC-10 aircraft. Let us give our local people all the backing we as individuals can; then maybe the "powers that be" will feel that it is safe and then stop imitating ostriches and take their heads out of the sand. We could be manufacturing 100 per cent Canadian Cessna and Piper (like) single and twin engine aircraft.

Yes, Trident does need large sums of capital and this should really be provided by private investors. But, like the powers that be, they too, want to play it safe. This once more will be their loss. I suggest that interested persons investigate the history of the big American firms, they will be surprised by the extent of government backing they often received in many forms. Canadians, unlike other countries, shout out to the world their dislike of foreign ownership of "Canadian" industries. Here, once more, is a genuine opportunity for us to put our money where our mouth is. — G. McFadden, Victoria.

Not enviable

I am referring here to Defence Minister Allan McKinnon's statement Jan. 4 in which he said: "I don't know what could be done about getting the Russians out" (of Afghanistan).

Common sense tells me the following. This apparent "takeover" of Afghanistan by Russia was made possible by the Iran crisis. Russia could not have arranged the "coup" in Iran because Khomeini's regime is not pro-Russia. But Russia did not want U.S. to eventually move into Iran and punish this country militarily for taking the American embassy.

So I suggest Canada ease the Iran crisis by telling the Shah, if he has ever loved his country, to go back there with all the money he took out of Iran. The Moslem world would probably turn itself against Russia after the Shah returns to Iran and thus make things a lot easier to force Russians out of Afghanistan.

McKinnon also said "We tend to play good neighbor Sam in these things until we are asked to come in. It's sort of an enviable role for us." I wish our defence minister never said that. Everyone knows how explosive Middle East countries are and there is nothing enviable about Canadians being killed over there. — J. G. Dufour, 1217 St. Patrick Street.

Sad mistake

Mr. B. H. Kelly's dream as set out in his letter (Times Jan. 4) is not likely to come true.

Would the NDP deny our service men the most up to date equipment available or would they just roll out the welcome mat for their Russian Comrades?

I cannot think of anything that Canada needs less than another NDP member in Ottawa. The present collection of school teachers, clerics and others, who for the most part have been feeding at the public breast for the better part of their lives, do more to hold up parliament than the official opposition.

Surely the record of the NDP provincial governments and of socialist governments in general, will discourage the voters from duplicating the sad mistake made by the electorate of the Prince Albert constituency in the November by-election. — J. E. Gracie, 216-1005 McKenzie Avenue.

Are tourist-luring geysers evidence of a deep "plume" of molten rock?

Yellowstone bomb

By WALTER SULLIVAN

NEW YORK — Under Yellowstone Park, recently accumulated evidence indicates the presence of a swelling reservoir of hot, and probably molten, rock that extends down more than 150 miles. This is regarded by a number of scientists as a time bomb that is destined sooner or later to erupt volcanically, perhaps explosively.

Over the last two million years, explosive eruptions at Yellowstone have not only blanketed the region with lava but have also spread airborne volcanic debris as far as Texas and California. Continuing subterranean activity in the region indicates that such eruptions are not ended.

Detailed studies of the area were initiated in 1972 after Dr. W. Jason Morgan of Princeton University proposed that Yellowstone, with its geysers and boiling mudpots, lies over a "plume" of molten rock rising slowly from great depth to beneath the rigid surface of the earth. Such plumes, he suggested, originate almost 3,000 miles down in the boundary region between the earth's liquid core and the more solid, enveloping mantle.

Morgan proposed that plumes, rising and spreading beneath Iceland and other key locations, account for such monumental movements as the splitting apart of the North Atlantic floor that gradually increases the distance between Europe and North America.

Morgan pointed to a trail of volcanic activity across southern Idaho, culminating at its eastern end in the currently active region of Yellowstone Park.

That a great subterranean reservoir of hot, and probably molten, rock lies there was deduced from recordings of earthquake waves that had traversed that region at various depths.

It was concluded that the reservoir of unusually hot rock does not extend much below 150 miles, implying that the feature is not a plume rising a thousand miles or more.

Nevertheless another report, by Dr. Harmon Craig of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography at La Jolla, Calif., seemed to indicate a deep origin of the erupted rock. Craig described worldwide measurements in volcanic rocks of helium 3 abundances relative to those of helium 4.

Helium 3 is a primordial form of helium whose atomic nuclei contain three particles: two protons and one neutron. Helium 4, normally a product of radioactive decay, consists of four such particles: two neutrons and two protons. As helium is an extremely light gas, both forms steadily escape from the earth's gravity.

Because helium 3 is not replenished by any natural process, it is greatly depleted in rocks that have been near enough to the earth's surface for the gas to escape. Those rocks with unusually high levels of helium 3 are assumed to have arrived recently from great depth.

In crystal rocks, Craig said, the helium 3-to-helium 4 ratio is only 0.1 times higher than that in the atmosphere. Yet in Yellowstone ratios as high as 16.5 have been found.

A theoretical analysis of the dynamics of plume behavior in the September issue of Scientia Sinica, published by the Chinese Academy of Sciences, concludes that the concept is "plausible," but that the hot spots originate several hundred miles down, rather than 1,000 miles or more.

The last great eruptions at Yellowstone apparently ended some 600,000 years ago after spreading more than 100 cubic miles of ash and lava over the landscape.

The volcano, having discharged this great volume of material, collapsed, forming the 40-mile-wide basin, or caldera, that embraces much of Yellowstone. A variety of heat-flow, gravity and magnetic measurements, as well as the seismic evidence, indicate the presence of hot rock there.

That fresh intrusions of molten rock may be swelling the reservoir is indicated by the steady rising of one dome on the caldera floor at about the growth rate of a fingernail.

The chief change, however, is a stretching of the landscape along a southwest-northeast axis — the direction of continental drift linked to formation of the Snake River volcanics.

Dr. Harold J. Prostka of Colorado State University believes "major eruptions" could be expected beneath Yellowstone sometime during the next three to five million years.

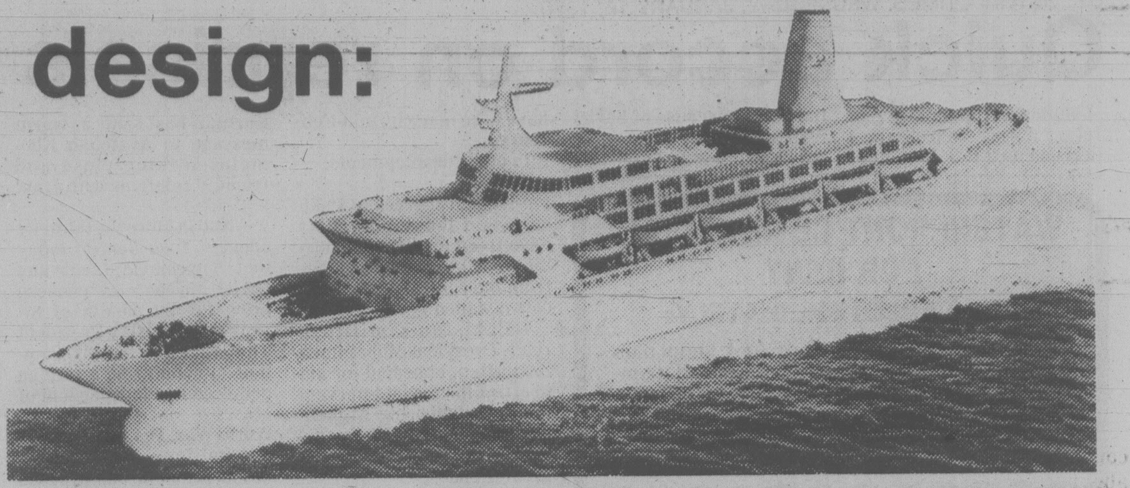
Great design:



'Last gasp of an age of leisure and elegance'

By ADA L. HUXTABLE
New York Times

NEW YORK — Of the great design triumvirate that represented "modernism" to the poets and prophets of the first part of the 20th century — the ocean liner, the train and the plane — two are already obsolete. The transatlantic liner and the transcontinental train have become objects of extreme nostalgia; the ocean liner is, in effect, extinct. And yet it was to these three icons of movement, change and speed that architects like Le Corbusier and critics like Sheldon Cheney fashioned hymns of praise. They became the symbols of freedom and mobility that the century craved.

At the same time, the ocean liner was the last gasp of an age of leisure and elegance, soon to be sacrificed to the speed and efficiency of air travel. It was a glorious anachronism; the mid-ocean suspension of time and reality is an experience unique in the history of travel and hedonism.

In retrospect, it becomes clear that the ocean liner was one of the unique design objects of the 20th century.

Symbol and style are never far apart. In the heyday of the big ships in the 1920s and '30s, the future was very much in fashion. The ocean liner was a supersymbol of a sleek new world, a mechanical marvel that could be nicely romanticized into a rich Art Deco setting for Old World pleasures.

Before long, the suave spirit of those shipboard salons invaded everything from Hollywood movies to department store furnishings. The railings and decks of Le Corbusier's seminal Savoy House, the steel tubing, indirect lighting and extraordinary mix of exotic wood veneers, lacquers, marbles, plastic and aluminum called "modernistic" at the time, became the universal standard of chic. Much was owed to what became known as le style paquebot.

According to Richard B. Oliver, a curator at New York's Cooper-Hewitt Museum, the story of the great liners starts in 1892 with the Lucania, which, he tells us, "set new standards for technological advance and decorative opulence."

He traces the technology from compound steam engine to steam turbine engine, noting the changes from wood to steel and aluminum, and describes radical revisions in hull and superstructure design. The race, of course, was in size and speed.

The Italian Line ships were carved and gilded versions of ponderous palazzi. The Cunard Line had working fireplaces. The German-built Amerika reproduced the restaurant of the Ritz-Carlton in London. The United States Line used frescoes of Indians and mounted moose heads. All had potted palms, and tassels and fringes trembled and swayed with the engines and the sea.

The Ile de France was the acknowledged turning point of le style paquebot described as the "great divide from which point on decorators reached forward rather than back." Consortiums of artists were pressed into service by competing lines for the new style in the 1930s. The Queen Mary mounted more than 50 varieties of exotic wood veneers on flannel — to reduce creaking. The Normandie's Dining Salon, with two-story, sculptured Lalique glass panels, stretched literally for blocks.

There was only one standard — the superlative. In the realm of the sybaritic, the French always seemed to do it best. Until its very last days, the liner France was considered the finest French restaurant in the world. The vin ordinaire was free, the cellars were a hushed treasury of rare vintages, and the chefs leaped to anticipate the most epicurean demand.

In the 1950s, in a regrettable excess of modernity, the last great ships of the United States and Italian Lines stressed an overabundance of linoleum and aluminum. The economics, the pace and the clientele all changed. The glory that was Cunard and the grandeur that was the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique were sold for scrap or demoted to a tourist attraction.

A great era, and a great style, died in corporate decisions made far from the sea.

Finland fears 'bear next door'

HELSINKI — NATO's plans to introduce new nuclear weapons into Europe have met fierce opposition in Finland.

The line taken by demonstrators and by most political commentators is that the weapons will alter the balance of power between the Soviet Union and the West, posing a threat to world peace.

But behind these pious utterances is fear that Russia may invoke its 1948 treaty with Finland, a treaty of "friendship, co-operation and mutual assistance."

Under the treaty, Finland is pledged to repel any attack on the Soviet Union by Germany, or nations allied to Germany, while the Russians are pledged to defend Finland if it is attacked by such forces.

Finns were given a nasty reminder about the treaty and its implications in a recent article in the news magazine Suomen Kuvalehti. The article was signed Juri Komissarov, a pen-name used on reports that represent the official position of the Soviet Union.

"By developing middle-range American weapons systems and placing them on the borders of the Soviet Union and other Socialist countries, NATO clearly wishes to create a superior European military force compared with the Warsaw Pact countries," said the article.

"It is clear that, in such a situation, the Soviet Union and all its allies must take counter-measures to ensure their security and protect the strategic power balance."

For Finns used to living with "the bear next door" the article was seen as an invitation to agitation against the new NATO weapons. Since then press criticism of the NATO move and carefully organized demonstrations have multiplied.

Finland's delicate position was underlined by a new trade pact last month with the Soviet Union. It allows for a 20-per-cent increase in Finnish exports to the U.S.S.R. this year to compensate for the rising price of the crude oil Finns buy from Russia. Finnish exports — mostly of heavy machinery, ships and food — will increase to a record 18 billion Finnish marks ($4.8 billion).

Snails to red-tape worms?

PARIS — Worms, it seems, are not the only animals that turn. Extract a snail from its shell, and it, too, can turn.

That seems to be the overwhelming lesson that the legions of snail eaters included in the French body politic are reduced to contemplating along with the grief of a great section of the nation after the recent death of a man who had come to be the very embodiment of gastropod gastronomy.

Mark Quinquandon was only 27 when he died, but already he had eaten his way to the top of the slippery world of snail eating. And the manner of Quinquandon's dying showed that he was not content to rest on his laurels as world champion snail eater.

He was on his way to cutting in half his own record of 12 dozen snails agiley pulled from their shells and downed in 11 minutes, 30 seconds — established at the Olympic Games of the Absurd in Lorraine last July — when indigestion felled him.

Within 24 hours, the six dozen snails he had ingested in three minutes had done their worst. Marc Quinquandon, despite all the considerable forces that his 367-pound body could muster, was no more.

After l'affaire Quinquandon, however, it is an open question whether the snail eaters of France and the commercial interests that crawl behind them are going to be able to maintain their current role in French society.

For one thing, it seems inevitable that the state will be called upon to lay down rules in one of the last unregulated sectors of French commerce. According to one estimate, there are 40,000 kinds of edible and non-edible snails. Careful codification of what can and cannot be eaten and under what conditions opens tempting vistas for battalions of regulation writers.

As the swash buckles

THE VANCOUVER SUN
An Editorial

It seems that a grave injustice has been done Errol Flynn. No one ever accused the late film star of having a thought in his head. Now it appears he may have had one. Nazism.

Mr. Flynn, who buckled more swashes than any man of his time and off-screen seemed entirely absorbed in burnishing Hollywood's most visible and arguably most repulsive booze-and-broads legend, was a Nazi spy. So says Charles Higham, author of, in the suitably breathless phrase of promotionland, a soon-to-be-published book.

If so, Mr. Flynn certainly had a wonderful cover. On film, he seemed to be perpetually dashing about with a sword in his hand dressed in Halloween outfits. It is hard to imagine that the knife clenched in his teeth as he swung around on the ship's rigging was hollow, containing a coded message, and was artfully passed from, say, a suspiciously Aryan-looking props girl to a heavily accented sauerkraut merchant (a closet member of the American Bund?) visiting Warner's back lot from Milwaukee.

Even greater strain is placed on our credulity by Mr. Higham's claim that Mr. Flynn once successfully sought Eleanor Roosevelt's aid in a murky criminal case involving a European doctor who later became a Nazi spy. Somehow, Mrs. Roosevelt's name does not come easily to the lips in association with Mr. Flynn's. Mrs. Roosevelt just does not seem to be Mr. Flynn's kind of woman, her undoubted beauty being entirely within.

These allegations may be particularly disturbing in Vancouver, a city of which Mr. Flynn was inordinately fond and where he died, rather heavily, in 1959. (His answer to a question, "Why do you like young girls?", posed by a female Vancouver reporter, in those shamelessly macho days, lives in legend.)

Certainly the claims give a startling new dimension to Mr. Flynn, to whom the word "undercover" has heretofore had an unambiguously simple application. And his espionage, if such it was, definitely sounds jollier than Sir Anthony Blunt's. One supposes Mr. Flynn spent no time smoking pipes around a university common room and debating the finer points of Nietzschean philosophy with a clutch of donnish co-conspirators.

It would be rich irony if the one war that the real-life Errol Flynn ever fought was on the losing side. We are not yet, however, entirely convinced Mr. Higham's book is accurate. Perhaps we should wait for the movie.

retary Cyrus Vance said a decision on a U.S. boycott of the games because of Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan would probably have to be made by mid-February.

In other developments:

—Afghan sources in Pakistan said today guerrillas have freed four of Afghanistan's northeastern provinces from the control of the Moscow-installed government;

—Pakistan's military ruler, President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, appealed for aid to offset the Soviet intervention in neighboring Afghanistan, saying "events in this region are moving toward greater chaos;"

—In Kabul, the new Afghan government of Babrak Karmal has sent a warm message to Ayatollah Khomeini seeking close and friendly relations with Iran; —And in Moscow, the news agency Tass denied today that Yugoslavia faces any Soviet threat as concern grew for the health of 87-year-old Yugoslav President Tito, who has led his Communist country on a foreign policy course independent of Moscow since the Second World War. His treatment in hospital for a serious circulation problem has aroused renewed speculation about his country's future.

A MANSION

BY SAMUEL McCLURE

At the head of a cul-de-sac in fashionable Oak Bay sits an .81 acre estate, flowered, lawned and quiet. Within the grounds the guest cottage unobtrusively takes its corner and the four-car garage and port stand quietly ready.

These buildings defer to the mangificent mansion of the classic Elizabethan Tudor variety. Lavishly appointed with the dark beams and leaded glass so typical of a bygone craftsmanship.

There are 6400 glorious square feet of living area which many years ago were deferentially converted into six self-contained tenancies.

The property now stands ready for the discrimininating new owner to convert it back to its original splendour or to astutely acquire it as a rare investment.

Yugoslav army goes on alert

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — Yugoslavia's army has been placed in a state of increased vigilance in response to the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan and the illness of 87-year-old President Josip Broz Tito, sources reported.

The well-informed sources said officials fear "unpredictable behavior" by the Warsaw Pact countries as long as Tito suffers from a serious leg ailment.

The Yugoslav Communist Party's Central Committee issued a declaration following a hastily called meeting, saying the Yugoslav people are facing the future united.

It also said that "in today's general situation," the cooperation of all sectors is required.

The declaration echoed last week's statement by the state and party presidiums that, because of a "very complex international situation, it is necessary to further strengthen all peoples' national defense, social self protection, vigilance and security in all the country."

Tito is ill from a circulatory blockage in his left leg that failed to respond to surgery last weekend. [illegible] gravest illness since a gall-bladder operation in 1951.

No official details of his "blood vessel disorder" have been revealed, although well-informed Yugoslav sources said he had a blood clot. Nor have any details of either surgery or treatment been given.

Doctors were optimistic after a weekend operation, and it first appeared Tito was making progress. But his condition deteriorated and an official medical bulletin disclosed that the leg operation had been unsuccessful.

Tito, a co-founder of the non-aligned movement, who has ruled Yugoslavia single-handedly since World War II, has followed an independent course from Moscow.

He has refused to join the Warsaw Pact and has been critical of Soviet moves. Yugoslavia voted Monday in favor of a U.N. General Assembly resolution calling for the withdrawal of Russian troops from Afghanistan.

Tito's latest illness has again focused attention on who will run Yugoslavia after he dies.

He has never designated a successor, devising instead a system of committee rule intended to carry on his work and policies without allowing power to be concentrated in one person.

Under the plan, the eight-member Federal State Presidium and 23-member Communist Party presidium will rule the country, collectively [illegible] sidium is chaired by a rotating presiding officer who serves for only one year.

Camp David foes in emergency summit

DAMASCUS (UPI) — Syria opened an emergency summit of hard-line opponents of the Camp David peace accords Wednesday warning of new American "conspiracies" and calling Moscow, not Washington, the true friend of the Arabs.

The hastily called summit was attended by the foreign ministers of Syria, Algeria, South Yemen, Libya and a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The five are grouped in a self-proclaimed Arab steadfastness and confrontation front — a loose coalition formed in December, 1977, to lead the campaign against Egypt and American-sponsored Middle East peace initiatives.

They last met in September, 1978. Internal squabbles since then — such as an ongoing dispute between PLO chief Yasser Arafat and Libyan strongman Col. Moammar Khadafy — had prevented further sessions.

"The Arab nation is facing a new stage of the Camp David conspiracies," Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam said at the opening session.

"The United States aims by its policy at consecrating its military presence in the region after the Camp David alliance consecrated its economic and political presence.

"Those who try and pretend to the world that they are defending Islam and the Moslems are at the same time giving help to Zionist racists who occupy Arab Jerusalem and kill Arabs and Moslems in south Lebanon," Khaddam said in apparent reference to the United States.

"The Arabs and Moslems know very well who their friends are and who their enemies are. The Arab nation cannot at all ignore those who try and crush it and compare these with the friendly Soviet Union who gives us support in our struggle," he added.

Arab diplomatic sources said the five conference members are concerned that the United States and its NATO partners may use the Afghan crisis to establish military bases in the region and isolate Moscow's Arab allies.

Syria receives extensive military and other aid from the Soviet Union.

The summit's participants have either expressed varying degrees of support for the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan or withheld comment on the matter.

Many more Arab and Moslem countries, led by Saudi Arabia, have condemned the Soviet intervention as an attack on Islam and potential threat to Arab oil.

The Saudis have been trying to forge a united Islamic front against the "atheistic" Russians. They have used the Jeddah-based Organization of the Islamic Conference — a mini-United Nations for Moslem world — as the framework for coordinating opposition.

The organization has called an emergency meeting to dicuss the Afghan crisis and 23 countries have agreed to attend, the Saudi press agency said. The meeting, called by Pakistan and Bangledesh, will be held in Islamabad, Pakistan Jan. 26.

Moinfar told a news conference: "It all depends on which countries participate. Any country which does will be deprived of oil."

Despite the threat, Japan announced today it will join the United States in clamping economic sanctions against Iran.

A high-ranking foreign ministry official who refused to be identified said, "Our policy of cooperation with the United States remains unchanged."

Japanese firms have contracted to import about 530,000 barrels per day of Iranian oil this year, up 15 per cent from last year's 460,000 barrels.

Meanwhile, from Kuwait comes word that firing squads have executed a number of Iranian army officers for plotting to overthrow the regime of Ayatollah Khomeini, the usually reliable Kuwait newspaper Al Rai Al Am reports.

Quoting unidentified diplomatic sources, the newspaper published in the Persian Gulf oil sheikdom said all the officers involved in the coup plot have been arrested and were executed secretly to avoid adverse publicity for the revolutionary regime.

No confirmation of the report was available, and sources in Tehran, the Iranian capital, said they have heard nothing about such a plot.

In other developments related to the Iran crisis:

— Panamanian President Aristides Royo contacted Iranian Foreign Minister Ghotbzadeh on Tuesday night to discuss an Iranian request for the extradition of the deposed shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

— The Iranian decision to expel American journalists is designed in part to diminish the power of the militants holding the U.S. hostages in Tehran, an Iranian diplomat to the UN said Tuesday.

FRANKFURT (Reuter) — West German police have seized more than $5 million in forged U.S. banknotes and arrested six suspects, Frankfurt Public Prosecutor Heinz Haueisen said.

FP sale aid in ads

TORONTO (CP) — Increased competition in Calgary and [illegible] made possible by acquisition of FP Publications Ltd. by Thomson Newspapers Ltd. will probably be good for advertisers, agency media directors say.

Thomson will be especially welcome in Calgary, where advertisers would like to see a strong daily newspaper alternative to Calgary Herald, which is owned by Southam Inc., said Roy Chernoff, media vice-president of McKim Advertising Ltd.

Calgary Albertan, one of the eight FP papers purchased Friday by Thomson, has "one of the best opportunities for growth." It is in an expanding market, is the morning paper and is printed in tabloid format, a combination which has proved successful in other markets.

Although Thomson now controls 44 daily papers in Canada, media buyers do not expect to see the company offer a group rate to advertisers. Most of the papers fit into major market advertising plans, while the others are in secondary markets where retail, not national, advertising is the most important revenue source.

Seagram's a good bet

By GAIL LEM
Canadian Press

The word on shares of Seagram Co. Ltd. is buy, says a Winnipeg analyst.

Leo D. Soenen of Richardson Securities of Canada said in a recent report that Seagram has survived the last six recessions and a trend toward lighter spirits.

He said in an interview that even if basic distilled spirits earning growth in 1980 is tempered by recessionary conditions, overall earnings growth likely will be sustained by a higher earnings from other sources.

Soenen said Seagram's worst experience during past recessions was a 24-per-cent earnings decline in 1948-49, and this was probably more the result of a post-war pause than a recession.

He said recessionary conditions have always resulted in decreased consumption of liquor.

But he said Seagram has implemented better marketing strategies since the 1973-75 recession, when its earnings declined about 17 per cent.

And he said the consumer preference for spirits which are lightened in color, taste and proof, which began in the mid-1950s, seems to have peaked in the mid-1970s.

Soenen said change in the U.S. method of assessing excise taxes on imported spirits, which became effective Jan. 1, could boost Seagram's fiscal 1980 pre-tax earnings by as much as $15 million.

He said Canadian spirits shipped to the United States in bulk were assessed $10.50 a gallon regardless of proof. This meant U.S. importers could buy the liquor at 100 proof and make a profit by cutting it to 80 proof later.

Meanwhile, bottled whisky was assessed $10.50 at 86 proof.

The change to an excise tax proportionate to proof will mean a profit to Canadian distillers exporting to the U.S., Soenen said.

The company should also benefit from a United Kingdom bill to limit the build-up of deferred tax liabilities arising from tax reductions for increases in inventory values.

The tax change could mean a 20-cent to 40-cent increase in fiscal 1980 earnings per share, Soenen said.

And he said the company's major oil and gas interests — including the Texas Pacific Oil Co. Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary — will contribute to earnings in the coming years.

Although spirits account for about 75 per cent of Seagram's earnings, oil and gas operations contributed $55.9 million to Seagram's operating income in fiscal 1978.

That figure climbed to $62.9 million in fiscal 1979 and further gains can be expected this year, Soenen said.

He said last week's proposed merger between Hiram Walker-Gooderham and Worts Ltd. and Consumers' Gas Co. will not immediately affect Seagram stock.

"I think people are still going to analyse Hiram Walker as a distiller," he said.

Although the merger would leave Seagram as the only distillery whose shares are traded on the Toronto Stock Exchange, Soenen said about 63 per cent of Walker-Gooderham earnings now come from spirits and the merged company will at first still draw its major earnings from its distilling operations.

Latest Mexican oilfield find among 'giants of the world'

MEXICO CITY (Reuter) — Mexico's state oil company Pemex has discovered a new oilfield in the southeast of the country with reserves of 1.5 billion barrels.

Pemex Director Jorge Diaz Serrano said the field, the Iris-Giraldas complex, can be counted among the giant oil fields in the world. Mexico's total proven reserves now total 45 billion barrels.

Diaz Serrano was addressing the opening session of a six-day meeting of the Latin American State Oil Reciprocal Assistance Organization attended by Brazil, Bolivia, Argentina, Mexico, Ecuador and Venezuela.

He said the prospects for more oil and gas discoveries in Latin America are good.

"Latin America has 20 per cent of the sedimentary basins in the world, which constitutes a good likelihood for the existence of oil below ground or in the Continental Shelf," he said.

The news of the new discovery followed Diaz Serrano's weekend statement that Mexico will cut off oil supplies to any client country or company which uses Mexican petroleum to speculate on the world spot market.

Diaz Serrano told reporters Mexico will not speculate on the world petroleum market and will try to prevent other countries from using its oil supplies for speculation.

"If we discover and can prove that this fundamental rule is being violated by a client, we will exclude him without mercy because we cannot permit this," he added.

He said Mexico has ways of discovering violations but did not give details.

Mexico sells oil to nine countries — the United States, Brazil, Costa Rica, Spain, France, Israel, Japan, Nicaragua and Yugoslavia.

Value of forest products could double in 20 years

OTTAWA (CP) — By the year 2000, the forestry industry could double the value of its production, create 100,000 jobs, and supply 10 per cent of the country's primary energy demand, says a discussion paper on proposed federal forestry policy.

But progress can be achieved only if governments, industry and labor work together to remedy complex problems, warned the paper released Tuesday by Environment Minister John Fraser.

It says the industry has has problems because its markets are declining, costs are rising and shortages of timber caused by poor foresty management are showing up in an increasing number of areas.

Poor long-term economic prospects and government inability to solve the problems has led to private investors having little confidence in the industry.

The Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers will be host at a meeting of forestry ministers in Toronto Jan. 29-30 to discuss the 21-page document prepared by the federal forestry service.

The report described the country's forests as a "great potential opportunity."

As non-renewable resources become increasingly tight, forests will become more valuable because they can produce energy, wood-based chemicals, animal fodder and fertilizers in addition to traditional pulp and paper products.

World consumption and prices of wood products would rise significantly by the year 2000 while wood supplies in western Europe and Japan dwindled. Competition from the United States would also probably drop.

Provincial governments own 90 per cent of the forests, but the report underlines a need for federal participation in the industry.

"Unlike other developed forest nations, the Canadian approach to forestry sector matters has always been ad hoc. Each jurisdiction has gone its own way." But that approach was no longer feasible.

The report said provinces and industry must deal separately with many separate departments "whose response to the same or closely related problems may not be compatible."

"Some mechanism to ensure consistency of the federal response on such matters is obviously desirable."

Federal financial support for provincial programs is one major concern. Proposals to change financial agreements would have to be considered carefully or future interaction in forestry programs would be difficult, the report said.

Nearly one million jobs depend on forest resources. In 1978 the forest industry produced $1.8 billion worth of goods and contributed nearly $9 billion to the net balance of payments.

Russian car yanked from auto show

VANCOUVER (UPC) — A Soviet car is being yanked as an exhibit at the Pacific International Auto Show in reaction to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, a show spokesman said Tuesday.

"Due to the recent Russian invasion in Afghanistan, and the feeling generated by this action among the Automobile Dealers Association of Greater Vancouver, the show committee is removing the Russian Lada as a feature exhibit at the 1980 show," said show chairman Karl Gerlach.

The association is sponsoring the auto show scheduled to begin Friday.

He denied the committee was making a political statement. It was just trying to pull the political element — the Soviet car — out of the show.

"There's a lot of people in Vancouver who might have objected if we left the car in the show," he said.

The association, which purchased the Lada for the show, hasn't yet decided how to dispose of it.

$27½M oil hunt planned

Canadian Hunter Exploration Ltd. will spend $27.5 million during the next five years in the search for oil and gas in northeastern B.C., Petroleum Resources Minister Bob McClelland said Tuesday.

The firm was the succesful bidder for exploration rights on nearly two million hectares in the Nechako Basin, about 100 kilometres west of Williams Lake, with a bid of $499,000.

McClelland said Canadian Hunter, a subsidiary of Noranda Mines Ltd., will spend $22 million to drill 12 wells and $5.5 million for geophysical work to obtain usable seismic data in the area.

The minister said the firm has spent $145 million in exploring for oil and gas in B.C. during the past five years, and has been "one of the industry's leaders in utilizing new exportation and well-completion technology."

"It has pioneered exploration of the deep basin with significant gas discoveries in the Elmworth area of Alberta."

Sub sales to Soviets affected?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of International Hydrodynamics Ltd. said Tuesday he is hopeful his firm will be allowed to complete a $19.5-million contract to supply four submersible vessels to the Soviet Union.

Mack Thomson said he has not been informed by the federal government that his firm is affected by Ottawa's new "tighten-up" policy governing the export of strategic and highly-technical goods to the Soviet Union.

Before Christmas, Thomson said he was getting the runaround from government officials in his attempt to sell the Soviets one manned submersible and three remote control mini-subs.

Now with the Afghanistan situation, the Canadian government has said it will cooperate with other nations to restrict the trade of some goods and Thomson is wondering if he will be affected.

"But I don't want to say anything particular at this time," he said.

Also Tuesday, the chairman of the Pacific International Auto Show said the Russian LADA, the Soviet version of a North American compact car, has been removed from this year's show that starts here Friday.

QUEUING UP for the big bang that never came, passersby in 700-block Fort Street Tuesday stop to watch as Armed Forces bomb disposal unit member at right removes mystery parcel from campaign office of Defence Minister Allan McKinnon. Parcel, about a foot long and six inches wide, and wrapped in brown paper was delivered by unknown courier at about 11 a.m. McKinnon's secretary became concerned as the parcel wasn't expected and there was no indication who sent it. The parcel was taken to the fleet diving unit in Colwood and opened. Contents were stationery supplies.

'If it's under $90,000 it's a cheap house'

By AL FORREST

Anyone buying a house this year will be entering a new world in terms of prices, newly-elected Victoria Real Estate Board president Ray Rawnsley said today.

"Five years ago an $80,000 house was considered expensive but now it is in the low price range. Anything under $90,000 is a cheap home in terms of the present market."

Rawnsley, [illegible] as president at noon today at a public meeting at The Empress, said in an interview that buyers would be hard-pressed to find anything for sale anywhere in the capital region under $60,000.

Houses from $60,000 to $90,000 are now in the low-price range, he said. The medium range is from $90,000 to $150,000. Anything above that is rated as expensive.

The numbers will surprise and dismay many people, he said.

"It takes two salaries now to buy most homes on the market. Few people can buy a $70,000 house on one salary."

The outlook for the balance of the year is more inflation, at least 12 per cent for low and medium priced properties. The inflation rate may be a bit lower at the top end.

"Demand is very high and the supply is limited. In these conditions prices can only go up."

The demand started slowly in 1979 but built up during the year as economic conditions improved here.

For 1979 the total sales under the board's Multiple Listing Service reached $235.7 million, up 38 per cent from $170.4 million one year ago.

There were 3,521 individual MLS sales during the year, up 30 per cent from 2,708.

But only 6,947 listings were received during the 12 months, down 13 per cent from 7,972.

This lower supply along with increasing demand has added to the price pressures.

What has happened, Rawnsley said, is that the rest of Canada has suddenly discovered Victoria.

"The attraction of Victoria was a well-kept secret but now the secret is out."

There has been a significant increase in the number of house purchases by people who want to move to Victoria from Alberta or Ontario. Buyers from Saskatchewan and Manitoba have also increased.

Some want to move to Victoria right away while others are buying now and planning to retire here in four or five years.

"A few years ago some members of the community were concerned about Americans buying up our land. Now Canadians are able to outbid them, especially those coming from Alberta. I'm sure we all welcome these newcomers."

While some American buyers might have been speculators, the Albertans are planning to live here, he said.

"They will soon become Victorians."

Rawnsley said there are some encouraging signs in the real estate market for home-buyers. The mortgage interest rate is on the way down.

For example, effective Jan. 15 some firms are offering five-year conventional mortgages at 13 per cent, down from a high of 15 per cent in 1979.

Further declines may be forthcoming because a large pool of money from registered retirement savings plans next month will have to be loaned out as mortgages.

"The (interest rate) trend is downwards, [illegible] will go below 12 per cent."

Another bright spot, he said, is the mortgage subsidy offered by the provincial government for newly-constructed homes.

"That is a positive measure and is welcome."

A similar subsidy for apartment construction might not be as useful, he said. Further tax aids may be necessary from the federal government to encourage apartment construction here.

Rawnsley was inaugurated as president by Eric Charman, president of the Canadian Real Estate Association.

'Power play' - Curtis

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

An offer by Saanich to assume the Racquet Club of Victoria's $850,000 mortgage debt was described today by Finance Minister Hugh Curtis as "a little bit of a power play."

The government hasn't promised the municipality a grant to help it acquire the facility and turn it into a public recreation centre, Curtis said.

Saanich's offer, made Tuesday, is contingent upon government assistance, Ald. Howard Sturrock said.

The municipality expects word from Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe by the end of the month, the alderman said.

"We're fairly certain that the government understands there is some urgency about the matter," he said.

Sturrock is chairman of a committee that recently put together a confidential report on the feasibility of Saanich acquiring the financially-troubled facility.

Racquet Club of Victoria Holdings Ltd. president Don Francis said today the company received Saanich's offer Tuesday.

Early next week the executive will decide between Saanich's offer and a private proposal also submitted Tuesday, he said.

The private proposal is the third from the private sector and more acceptable than the previous two, according to Francis, who declined to give details.

Victoria Racquet Club Society, which leases the facility from the holding company, is on another drive to raise money from members to save the facility.

The society's proposal will also be considered if submitted in time, Francis said.

Society financial director David Moore said last week it must raise $200,000 through the sale of preferred and common shares before taking any action to acquire the club.

Francis said early proposals by Concord Developments and another unspecified private company are unacceptable because they include commercial development of part of the site.

Ald. Sandy Noel recently criticized council's move to take over the facility, saying the acquisition is "too rich for the municipality's economic blood."

Noel said Saanich will have to pay at least half the cost of the acquisition and pay a substantial yearly operating loss.

Curtis says the most Saanich can hope for is a one-third grant under the province's Recreation Assistance Program.

Greeter won't return

Out-of-work street greeter Earl Levy says he won't go back to the Red Lion Motor Inn unless the management changes, but will look for a job at other establishments.

Levy, 72, has applied for additional old age pension benefits to support he and his wife, who is in hospital, after the loss of his full-time job.

"You're destitute when you're my age and you're out on your own. I'm not very good at robbing banks," he said.

The red-coated, top-hatted greeter was a familiar figure standing in front of the Red Lion waving signs and performing comedy routines to entice motorists to drop in.

But last week Levy, who described his former job as public relations, said he was forced to quit after manager Ted Anderson demanded he shovel snow.

Levy, who has a back and heart condition, walked off the job.

"I was worried about my wife and I couldn't take anymore," said Levy.

He doesn't think he has a chance of getting back his old job.

"If they can do without me I can do without them."

Windows smashed on 11 cars

A 20-year-old man has been charged following an early morning vandalism spree in the 3500-block Savannah in which 11 car windows were broken.

Saanich police arrested the suspect at the scene after a resident reported at 3 a.m. a prowler breaking into cars.

The suspect was to appear in provincial court charged with mischief and theft under $200.

The man is also facing an impaired driving charge in another incident four hours earlier.

Chamber studies move into development role

Directors of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce met today to consider whether to try and take over economic development functions for the Capital Regional District.

President Cedric Steele said a task force will make recommendations and he believes they favor bidding if the CRD decide to contract out the role.

The chamber spearheaded the push for an economic development commissioner.

Since Barry Mayhew resigned as commissioner, the CRD has been trying to get support for economic development as a regional function but Oak Bay and the Saanich Peninsula municipalities have balked.

Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier, chairman of the regional district's economic development committee, said today directors have informally discussed going out to contract as a possible solution to Oak Bay's reluctance to have the regional district take on any more functions.

He said other organizations or groups may be interested in bidding for the contract but said he feels the chamber would be the prime applicant.

Steele said the directors are considering whether an economic development commissioner should be hired or a research worker.

Steele said if the function becomes regional, the camber will have to broaden the field to include outlying areas of the district.

Couvelier said there has been no formal debate or vote on whether to contract out but the matter could be on the agenda of next week's board meeting.

It isn't easy auditioning into the empty seats at the McPherson

Good or bad, they all got the gentle touch

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

A small dark-haired woman waiting in the wings took off her red coat, walked with a slight limp to the stage and tentatively sang a medley of pop hits into the empty seats of McPherson Theatre.

As her confidence grew, the delicate voice strengthened. Her fingers snapped once or twice and her body dipped in time to the music.

After the performance she received a round of applause from a couple of people sitting near the front.

Michael Bennett, associate producer of the 14th annual B.C. Variety Club Telethon, ran up on the stage to shake her hand and thank her for auditioning.

His enthusiastic response was repeated 22 times during the afternoon as Greater Victoria area talent lined up for a chance to appear on the Feb. 16 and 17 telethon.

There was a folk singer who told humorous stories about life in the country and the commercialization of Christmas.

A country singer in a cowboy hat said he left his five-piece band behind to come and audition.

Bennett was almost blasted out of his seat by a nervous young man in blue jeans who belted out rock and roll at the top of his lungs; and after that a dapper gentleman wearing glasses and a three-piece grey suit played Valdy and Kris Kristofferson tunes.

They should all be encouraged, whether they're loaded with talent or not, said Bennett, explaining his gentle touch.

An independent television producer with a solid entertainment background in newspapers and broadcasting, Bennett knows all about nerves and the fragility of a performer's ego, particularly when the performer is an amateur not used to auditioning.

Picking talent for a telethon is a process diametrically opposed to the way performers are chosen for television spots, says Bennett, who spent several years with the Alan Hamel show before turning independent.

Hired by BCTV to produce the telethon, he has been traveling around B.C. in search of talent.

The telethon approach is democratic — integrity is more important than talent, according to Bennett, who says: "I would rather see somebody sing one of his or her own songs than a cover of a pop tune."

Performers have to appeal to the audience, which will encourage viewers to call in donations.

This year's show is 21 hours of live television broadcast from the Queen Elizabeth Theatre. Organizers hope to keep the 2,000 seats occupied the entire time — with audience changes.

Host of the telethon is country singer Blake Emmons who shuttles between engagements to emcée similar shows across Canada and the U.S.

Celebrities appearing include Rolf Harris, Bob McGrath and Ronnie Prophet.

Since the entire telethon will be carefully scripted to keep a fast pace, a lot of talent has to be garnered from the four corners of the province.

Before he arrived in Victoria last week, Bennett was in Prince Rupert and he scarely stopped for breath before getting back on the plane and heading to Prince George. Also on the itinerary are Penticton, Kamloops and the Okanagan.

Two, or possibly three acts will be selected from each area.

After viewing the local talent, Bennett said narrowing it down to two performers will be difficult.

Judge turns down Taiwan

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Taiwan's battle to keep its Olympic identity, flag and anthem for this year's Games failed Tuesday when a Swiss court rejected the country's complaint against the International Olympic Committee.

Sports officials from Taiwan had maintained the IOC violated its own statutes by imposing what they claimed was a pro-Peking mandate on their national Olympic committee.

A Swiss judge ruled the complaint invalid and refused to grant a temporary injunction, setting aside the new IOC formula.

Under the formula, Taiwan was asked to change the name, flag and anthem under which its teams would compete in all future Olympic Games to smooth the re-entry of mainland China into the Olympic movement. Taiwan had been using the same name, flag and anthem as did pre-revolution China.

The decision by court President Pierre Bucher was sent by mail to IOC lawyer Francois Carrad and Alain Wurzburger, counsel for the Taiwan Olympic Committee.

"Naturally, we are very satisfied," Carrad said.

In Taipei, Shen Chia-Ming, president of Taiwan's Olympic body, called the decision of the court "regrettable" and said, "My committee, which is seeking equal and fair treatment by other International Olympic Committee members, has decided to appeal to a state court in Switzerland to get a reasonable and legal solution."

The IOC had no official comment at its Lausanne headquarters, but spokesman Alain Coupat said it would now be up to Taiwan to decide whether it wanted to compete under the new ruling or withdraw from the Games.

"It depends entirely on them," he told a reporter.

The court decision pertains only to the 1980 Winter Games in Lake Placid, N.Y., and the Summer Games in Moscow and does not preclude Taiwan from making a bid to regain the use of its previous identity, flag and anthem for future Olympics.

Henry Hsu, the IOC member in Taiwan, has filed two suits in the Swiss courts against the new formula, but neither is likely to be heard until well after the Summer Games. That prompted Taiwan to make its request for an emergency injunction that would have allowed it to continue to use its traditional Olympic symbols this year.

Taiwan has the right to appeal the court decision, but Carrard said such an appeal was unlikely to be succsessful.

"The court president has given his decision and that decision stands. I cannot see any appeal having any more success."

At the court hearing last week, Carrard warned that to favor Taiwan's claims could result in a "catastrophic precedent" for the Olympic movement. He said it could have "grave consequences."

Meanwhile, members of the Taiwanese delegation said privately they were banking on the support of the U.S. Olympic Committee which they said had always backed their cause.

Energy crisis won't snuff Olympic flame

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Energy crisis or not, the Olympic flame will burn bright next month at Lake Placid's 1980 Winter Games, the state's public service commission ruled Tuesday.

PSC rules ban the use of propane or natural gas to fuel outdoor lighting. That could have snuffed out the flame of the giant Olympic torch which traditionally burns in the host community throughout the Games.

But on Tuesday the PSC said it would allow propane to be used to fuel the Olympic torch at Lake Placid and for torch replicas in Glens Falls, Tarrytown and in Albany.

"Propane is the only practical fuel for this purpose," the commission said. "We believe the symbolism of the flame . . . warrants granting a temporary exemption for use of propane."

There's savage side to winter

Some rambling notes along the trail:

There is another aspect of winter this writer neglected to mention in a recent piece urging people to get out and enjoy the snowy season rather than complaining about its effects.

So it was perhaps poetic justice that I experienced a little of the incredibly savage side of the season during a jaunt to ski Green Mountain at the weekend.

Gale-force winds near the top of the access road were sweeping up the mountainside and scooping up vast quantities of powdery snow from a logged-over area.

This created "whiteout" conditions — familiar to prairie folk — especially those who have become lost while walking between their house and barn.

The wind-whipped snow reduced visibility to about three feet. I couldn't see past the hood of my vehicle or at times even see the snow banks on either side of the plowed-out road.

Forced to slow down, I couldn't maintain enough momentum to get around the final hairpin turn and slid nose-first into a snowbank. With a little heart-in-the-mouth manoeuvering because of a dropoff hundreds of feet deep just below the hairpin, I managed to spin the truck around in the middle of the road and utilize a lull in the wind to gain enough speed to get around the corner.

When visibility dropped to zero once again, I was forced to put chains on the front tires of my four-by-four and proceed at a crawl to where some trees broke the force of the wind and vision returned.

Luckily, we were in no real danger because a lot of other four-by-fours were heading up the mountain at the same time and a "cat" was coming downhill to clear the road.

But similar weather conditions in a more isolated part of the Island might have meant a long wait for the wind to abate.

And, for someone not prepared to wait under those circumstances, the consequences could be tragic.

So like I said before, get out and enjoy the magic winter has to offer.

But go cautiously with enough gear and knowledge to handle any possible twist in the weather.

Chapman leading Blues back into playoff drive

By Canadian Press

Blair Chapman may just prove to be St. Louis Blues' ticket to the playoffs.

Beset by injuries early in the season, the Blues managed to pry the former first-round draft pick away from Pittsburgh Penguins, and since his acquisition in early November, Chapman has been on a tear.

The 23-year-old right winger scored his 16th goal in 28 games with St. Louis on Tuesday night and it stood up as the winner in the Blues' 2-1 National Hockey League victory over Minnesota North Stars.

In other games, New York Islanders shelled Winnipeg Jets 5-2 at Uniondale, N.Y., and Philadelphia Flyers bounced visiting Washinton Capitals, 7-4.

St. Louis has not made it to post-season competition since losing in the quarter-finals in 1976-77. But the Blues are the NHL's hottest commodity in 1980 with four wins and a tie in five games. They are also 7-1-2 in their last 10 games and 10-3-3 since Red Berenson replaced Barclay Plager as coach Dec. 8.

Among those sidelined early this year was Wayne Babych, the right winger on St. Louis's high-scoring line from last season, which featured Bernie Federko at centre and Brian Sutter on left wing and accounted for 99 of St. Louis's 249 goals.

Enter Mr. Chapman.

Emile Francis, the Blues' president and general manager, secured Chapman, the second player picked in the 1976 amateur draft, from the Penguins in exchange for Bob Stewart, one of 16 defenceman on the St. Louis training camp roster.

Chapman was immediately installed on the line alongside Federko and Sutter. The rest is history.

In addition to Chapman's success, Federko has 17 goals, Sutter 16 and the Blues stand 10th in the over-all standings with a 18-19-7 record — just three points back of first-place Chicago Black Hawks in the Smythe Division.

The four divisional winners and the next 12 teams over-all qualify for the playoffs.

Chapman, a native of Lloydminster, Sask., scored 24 goals in his second NHL season but managed only 10 last year.

On the game-winner Tuesday, Federko won the draw from Minnesota's Bobby Smith to the left of North Stars netminder Gilles Meloche and Chapman quickly whipped a 30-foot wrist shot over the goaltender's left leg at 2:26 of the final period.

"I saw it all the way," Meloche said. "But I didn't have time to get set and he beat me to the far corner, just past my left leg."

St. Louis goalkeeper Mike Liut then took over, turning aside all 13 shots in the final 20 minutes — including four dangerous thrusts by Minnesota left winger Steve Payne.

Despite the win, Berenson was not happy with the work of the Blues' defence.

"It was an exciting game for the fans, but it was the kind of a game that gives a coach ulcers," he said. "I don't like to see our goalie have to stand on his head at home to win a game."

Wenzel wins giant slalom

AROSA, Switzerland (AP) — Hanni Wenzel of Liechtenstein captured a women's giant slalom race today to increase her over-all lead in the World Cup ski standings.

Scoring her third win in four giant slaloms so far this season, she clocked a total time of 2:18.15 for two runs on fast tracks in hard snow.

Marie-Theres Nadig of Switzerland was second with a time of 2:18.44, followed by Perrine Pelen of France, third in 2:19.85.

Wenzel now leads the World Cup standings with 222 points.

Excellent conditions, with grey skies clearing in time for the second run, favored the racers. There were only few casualties, among them Austrian Regina Sackl, Italy's Wilma Gatta — both eliminated after gate errors — and Christine Cooper of the U.S., who abandoned after a fall in the opening run.

Both courses were through 46 gates and had a vertical drop of 305 metres — the first run featuring several wide turns and technically difficult bends, the second much straighter and faster, and some competitors complained it clearly favored the women who are strong in the rapid downhill races.

Hoop victory

Williams Automotive mauled Vidalin Construction 86-38 in a Victoria Senior "B" Women's Basketball League game Tuesday at Lansdowne Junior High School.

Lorraine Tutte scored 15 points for Williams.

Ian signs with Seattle

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle Sounders announced Tuesday that Ian Bridge of Victoria, a 20-year-old rookie in the 1979 North American Soccer League season, has signed a one-year contract.

Bridge, a 6-foot-1, 170-pounder, stepped into a starting defensive role for the Sounders in mid-season of the 1979 campaign. He finished with one goal and three assists.

Super Bowl can be played

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge says the Super Bowl football game between Los Angeles Rams and Pittsburgh Steelers can be played as scheduled Sunday in Pasadena, Calif.

Judge Carl O. Bue Jr. dismissed Tuesday a $12 million lawsuit filed as a result of a controversial call on a Houston Oilers pass play in the American Conference championship game against the Steelers Jan. 6 in Pittsburgh.

Bue referred to the two plaintiffs, William Pabst and Diane Simons, as "two disheartened Houston football fans" but said they had failed to show that any federal laws had been violated or that constitutional rights had been impinged.

The suit contended the plaintiffs had suffered "anger, consternation, embarrassment and sleeplessness" because of the ruling by side judge Donald Orr that nullified a touchdown pass reception by Oilers' Mike Renfro. In addition to damages, the suit sought an injunction against the National Football League championship game between Pittsburgh and Los Angeles at Pasadena.

Pabst said Bue's ruling will be appealed.

Meanwhile, another Oilers fan, Nick Clayton, said petitions bearing 166,464 signatures and demanding a replay of the game Pittsburgh won, 27-13, have been delivered to the NFL office.

But it may be quite a while before Pete Rozelle, the NFL commissioner, sees the petitions.

A secretary in the league office in New York said a package had arrived from Houston but Rozelle already was en route to the Super Bowl and would not return until February.

Raiders are poised to desert Oakland

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Barring a snag in negotiations, Oakland Raiders will announce plans within the next few days to move the National Football League franchise to Los Angeles, The Times reported Tuesday.

The only remaining unsettled question is whether the club will solicit league approval or make a unilateral decision, said the newpaper's sources.

Al Davis, managing partner of the Raiders, is apparently being urged by other NFL clubowners to make a formal request for a league-wide ballot. Many owners believe his move will have the support of at least the required 21 (of 28) franchises, The Times said.

However, Davis is being advised by his senior league counsel, former San Francisco mayor Joseph Alioto, that NFL approval is unnecessary if not irrelevant, the newsp[illegible]

The Raiders, one of the most successful NFL clubs of the 1970s, would replace Los Angeles Rams, who move to Anaheim next season.

Cats clipped in overtime

Winger Don Gillen scored two goals, including the game-winner at 8:31 of sudden-death overtime, to give the Brandon Wheat Kings a 5-4 victory over Victoria Cougars in Western Hockey League play before 2,421 Brandon fans Tuesday night.

Gillen also picked up three assists, on goals by Mike Winther, Carl Mokosak and Dave Chartier. The Wheat Kings led 3-1 at the end of the first period and the teams were tied 3-3 after 40 minutes of play.

Brad Palmer scored three times for Victoria and Bob Smith picked up the tying goal at 17:59 of the third period to send the game into overtime.

Ron Popplestone turned aside 41 shots in the Wheat Kings net while Kevin Eastman made 33 saves for the Cougars.

Brandon received six of 10 minor penalties and the teams split two majors.

In other games, Portland Winter Hawks moved to within one point of first-place Cougars in the Western Division by battling host Saskatoon Blades to a 7-7 overtime tie while Medicine Hat Tigers edged visiting Billings Bighorns, 2-1.

The Winter Hawks fell behind 4-0 midway through the second period before rebounding with four goals within a span of four minutes and 56 seconds.

Defenceman Kevin Tendler led the Blades with three goals while Bart Yachimec paced Portland with a goal and three assists.

With 43 seconds left in the game, the Tigers' Derek Davis was called for tripping and Bighorn netminder Neil Girard was pulled for an extra attacker. But Billings could not get the equalizer.

Overtime may come to NHL

TORONTO (CP) — The National Hockey League may institute a sudden-death overtime period to decide tie games if it is able to realign the league's four divisions along geographical lines and incorporate an unbalanced schedule to promote rivalries, NHL president John Ziegler said Tuesday.

"Overtime is a very complex concept but one that makes some good sense if we're able to come to some sort of arrangement on realignment and scheduling."

"Overtime makes especially good sense if the disparity in talent between the top and bottom clubs can be reduced.

"With realignment, there could be more controls. Right now, teams do not get relatively equal travel and rest times.

Canucks' game on TV

Hockey and basketball highlight the list of sports activities on tap tonight.

Saanich Braves tackle Fuller Lake Flyers in a South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League game at 8:15 at Fuller Lake Arena.

Two games are scheduled in the South Island Big Six Hockey League with PPCLI Pats meeting Victoria Athletics at 8:15 in Esquimalt Sports Centre and Juan de Fuca Merchants tackling Duncan Silver Park Blades at 8:30 in Juan de Fuca Arena.

In Greater Victoria Senior High School Girls' Basketball League play, Mt. Douglas is at Oak Bay at 4 and Claremont is at Belmont at 6:30.

Cuckoo Clock and Ivy's meet in a Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basektball League game at 9 in S.J. Willis Junior High.

Television viewers wanting some sports action can turn to the National Hockey League game between Atlanta Flames and Vancouver Canucks at 8 on Channel 8.

Tom, Tony still star class

TORONTO (CP) — Tom Wilkinson and Tony Gabriel didn't have banner seasons, but their performances were still heralded the best at their positions to ensure them another glimpse of Canadian Football League history.

Quarterback Wilkinson of Edmonton Eskimos, tight end Gabriel of Ottawa Rough Riders and centre Al Wilson of British Columbia Lions were the only offensive players to repeat at their positions on the 1979 CFL All-Star team.

The results of voting by the Football Reporters of Canáda were announced Tuesday by FRC secretary-treasurer Oliver Babirad.

Wilkinson, who won the Schenley Trophy as the outstanding player in Canada in 1974, has continued to amaze the experts who yearly tend to write him off as a threat to their Grey Cup aspirations.

But as he has done each year, Wilkinson continued to lead Edmonton when the going got rough, just as he did this year in the Grey Cup finale against Montreal Alouettes.

He's not playing regularly now — he shares the Eskimos quarterbacking with Warren Moon — but, like wine, he seems to improve with age and in 1979 was rated third in the Western Conference while completing 120 of 206 pass attempts for 2,132 yards and 19 touchdowns.

Gabriel, the Eastern Conference's premier receiver for several seasons, wasn't as impressive statistically in 1979 as he was the previous year when he won both the Schenley and outstanding Canadian awards.

But his 48 receptions for 761 yard and eight TDs got him the nod at tight end while Wilson became the only B.C. player to make five CFL all-star teams.

The only other all-star repeat offensively was on the specialty team — Edmonton punter Hank Ilesic, who averaged 47.3 yards from 119 kicks.

Vikings facing tougher chore

University of Victoria Vikings and Vikettes both head over to Vancouver this weekend as favorites to sweep their two-game series against University of British Columbia basketball teams.

Vikettes are expected to have a somewhat easy time in their contests with the UBC Thunderettes.

The record says it all. Vikettes are top ranked nationally in university women's basketball and are unbeaten in eight Canada West conference games and in 22 outings over-all this season. UVic's Carol Turney-Loos, who has been chalking up an average of 27 points a game, is the league's leading scorer while Luanne Hebb of the Vikettes is in third place.

Thunderettes have lost all eight of their conference games and are in last place.

Vikings should expect a much tougher two-game chore against the Thunderbirds, who have won three and lost three and are in a third-place tie with Calgary in the men's standings. UVic men also lead the conference standings with a 6-0 record and Billy Loos tops the scorers with a 23.3 points per game average.

Mixed rinks get their turn in curling playoff spotlight

By BILL WALKER

The mixed championships are next on the curling agenda and city entries get a break in that both the South Island and Island playdowns are to be contested at Victoria-area rinks.

The opening South Island playdown at Playland this weekend has drawn 19 rinks, from which will come four qualifiers for the Island Zone 1 championship at Victoria Curling Club, Feb. 8-10.

The North Island playdown has an entry of eight rinks and will be played at Duncan with four rinks to qualify.

Noticed among the local entries is a possible confliction of curling interests as included in the list are three qualifiers for the men's Island Labatt's tankard competition.

And, with two rinks to qualify from that event for the Pacific Coast Curling Association final at New Westminster, where four rinks will qualify for the new B.C. eight-rink playdown on Feb. 8-10, it could be that some skips could be in two finals at the same time.

The dates for the Island mixed and B.C. men's playoff are the same.

However, everyone apparently is aware of the problem, except that there used to be some rule that curlers entering an event were supposed to indicate they could carry on to its conclusion.

But such is not always the case. Witness last year, when Bernie Sparkes' rink won the B.C. Mixed championship at the Racquet Club, but then had to withdraw because his wife, Lindsay Sparkes, having won the Canadian, was to represent Canada in the first woman's world in Scotland.

And that is how Ivan Carlisle of Port Alberni, the provincial runner-up, got the invitation to the Mixed in place of Sparkes.

The skips with the problems this time are Brad Clarke and Tim Horrigan of Victoria Club and Al Frame of the Racquet Club, all of whom have qualified, along with Jim Gallaugher of Playland, for the Island men's final.

Meanwhile, undoubtedly they will have their hands full in the South Island before they get into a possible compromising situation since the competition promises to be extremely keen.

Two of last year's qualifiers to the Island are back as skips in a field that is highly-competitive.

One is Frame. The other is Rob Cummings. Dave Smith of Juan de Fuca and Pat McGuire of Esquimalt were the others.Smith will be throwing second rocks for Lowell Goulden from Juan de Fuca this time. McGuire is not entered.

In addition, Gordie Carmichael, Horrigan and Don Matheson all have represented city clubs in past B.C. mixed finals and, among others (check the list) must rate serious consideration.

Also scheduled on the weekend are the Legion playdowns at Esquimalt with six rinks entered in the seniors division and five in the regular division.

Junior hoop highlight

One of the highlights of the season for junior high school girls' basketball players — a tournament featuring the 12 top-rated teams on the Lower Island — will be held this Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

It's the annual Victoria City Police tournament at Lansdowne Junior High.

Defending-champion Oak Bay and last year's runner-up, Lansdowne, will both be competing again. Their strongest threats are expected to come from Cedar Hill, Reynolds, Colquitz and Claremont.

Games begin at 4 p.m. on Thursday and continue through Friday and Saturday. The final is slated for 8 p.m. Saturday.

World bowling meet

MELBOURNE, Astralia (Reuter) — Canada meets Papua New Guinea when the 20-country world lawn bowling championships start Thursday.

Panthers bounce Bays

Parkland Panthers, normally an "A" class school, proved they were more than equal to the pressures of "AA" competition by tripping Oak Bay Bays 68-59 in a Greater Victoria Senior High School Boys' Basketball League game Tuesday.

Panthers, who captured the Vancouver Island "AA" title last year, had considered dropping back to the "A" classification for schools with an enrollment of less than 200 boys this season.

Dexter Williams led the Panthers with 23 points while John Ibbotson added 19.

Jeff Loukes fired 19 points to lead the Bays, who trailed 34-26 at half time.

In other "AA" games, Mt. Douglas Rams tripped Belmont Braves 78-72 and Victoria Totems bounced Spectrum, 61-47.

Ian Lang sparked the Mt. Doug attack with 27 points while Greg Webber added 14. Marc Haas topped Belmont, which trailed 38-35 at the half, with 19.

In "A" games, Mark Richards counted 20 points to lead Dunsmuir Demons to a 75-62 decision over Reynolds Roadrunners and Stelly's Stingers downed Lambrick Park, 52-37.

Nanaimo Islanders defeated Cowichan Thunderbirds 71-63 in a North Island League game.

In Greater Victoria Senior High School Girls' League play, Parkland topped Oak Bay 45-35, Mt. Douglas trounced Belmont 75-40, Dunsmuir downed Reynolds 44-38, Victoria defeated Spectrum 57-45 and Stelly's hammered Lambrick Park, 40-20.

Kelly Hunter sank 15 points to lead Parkland and Sue Walton topped Oak Bay with 20.

Alison Snow set the pace for Mt. Doug's win with 24 points and Marie Johnson sparked the Dunsmuir victory with 26 points.

Winds halt skiers

WENGEN, Switzerland (Reuter) — Extremely strong winds of more than 120 kilometres an hour (75 miles an hour) dislodged a safety net and caused a practice run for men's World Cup downhill ski races to be cancelled Tuesday.

Alberni back in early March

The Queen of Alberni, damaged in a grounding in Active Pass Aug. 9, will return to service on the Tsawwassen-Swartz Bay run in early March.

The B.C. Ferry Corp. announced Tuesday the vessel's gearbox has been repaired and returned from Germany. The 18-ton gearbox now will be put in place, after which the delicate task of realigning the gears will begin.

The grounding is estimated to have cost the corporation $1.5 million.

This does not include the cost of Insurance Corporation of B.C. settlements paid to owners of vehicles damaged when the grounded vessel tilted sharply during low tide. A valuable race horse died in the chaos on the car deck.

The corporation also said 14 tenders have been received for the design of a roll-in-roll-off vessel for use on the mid and north-coast service.

The vessel must be capable of loading from either end or from the side, or even going ashore on a hard beach.

Tenders for the design alone range from $32,550 to almost $200,000. There is no estimate of the total cost of such a vessel.

Basques take death blame

BILBAO, Spain (Reuter) — The Basque separatist guerrilla group ETA has claimed responsibility for the fatal shooting of a paramilitary civil guard in the northern Basque town of Elorrio.

Single building, fire code sought

A committee has been established to advise the provincial government on a single building and fire code for the province, Labor Minister Jack Heinrich said Tuesday.

Planning, construction and occupancy of buildings now are controlled by many agencies with conflicting and overlapping regulations, he said.

"This is a major project aimed at elimination of red tape and the rationalization of regulations."

Heinrich said he has asked the committee to submit its report by the end of February so legislation can be introduced in the next session of the legislature.

Organizations represented on the committee include the provincial ministries of the attorney-general, finance, labor and municipal affairs.

Alberta to consult on dam

Alberta Environment Minister Jack Cookson has promised continuing consultation with B.C. on his government's proposal to dam the Peace River and flood part of northeast B.C.

Cookson met in Victoria Tuesday with Environment Minister Stephen Rogers to discuss the proposed dam at Dunvegan, Alta., 80 kilometres from the B.C.-Alberta border, and other matters of mutual interest.

Cookson said the height of the dam has not yet been established and there are several possible plans.

Rogers explained: "Of the various proposals put forward, one involves no flooding of B.C. at all, another involves a small amount of flooding and another involves a substantial amount of flooding."

He said he told Cookson of the B.C. government's concern regarding any possibility of flooding.

"They're not about to start pouring concrete," Rogers said.

"It's at the pre-engineering stage. I just expressed the concern of the province if there were to be flooding in B.C."

Cookson said construction of the dam likely is 10 to 15 years down the road.

However farmers and environmentalists in B.C.'s Peace River Valley are up in arms at the prospect of losing some of the best farmland in the province to the floodwaters.

"It's interesting to note that the concept of the dam at Dunvegan wouldn't be possible if we had not built the original W. A. C. Bennett Dam on the Peace in the first place, because there wouldn't be sufficient water flow," Rogers commented.

McDiarmid to decide if election act broken

Attorney-General Allan Williams today confirmed that his associate deputy minister, Neil McDiarmid, will make the final decision on whether to proceed with charges against Social Credit officials for a breach of the Elections Act.

B.C. director of intergovernmental affairs Dan Campbell resigned last month following disclosures of unreported campaign expenditures.

Williams also confirmed that his former law partner, L.C. Dudley, is one of two lawyers retained by the provincial secretary's ministry to advise the chief electoral officer on the matter.

Williams said Dudley is non-political and has done considerable work for the chief electoral officer in the past.

The attorney-general said the second lawyer, Tony Pantages, was brought in because of his experience in criminal law since a breach of the Elections Act is "quasi criminal in nature."

Williams said McDiarmid will take into account whatever opinions these two lawyers provide but he will make the decision on whether to pursue the matter.

It was McDiarmid who recently decided not to proceed with charges of influence peddling against Socred MLA Bill Ritchie, despite RCMP and crown counsel recommendations that charges be laid.

Williams was unable to say how soon a decision on the Elections Act case will be made.

Meanwhile, the three-month old RCMP investigation into phoney letters to the editor and other Socred dirty tricks continues.

Police Tuesday interviewed Brenda Dalglish, the former Goldstream Gazette reporter whose story on an Esquimalt constituency association meeting sparked the entire furore over dirty tricks.

Dalglish now works for the Times.

Coroners missing pay

Attorney-General Allan Williams today instructed his deputy, Richard Vogel, to find out what is holding up paycheques for some B.C. coroners.

Chief coroner Dr. Bill McArthur says only four of B.C.'s 210 coroners are salaried. The rest are paid on a fee-for-service basis and they haven't been paid since Nov. 4.

Williams also said he has a proposal before treasury board to improve staff levels in the chief coroner's office. McArthur asked for more staff last October.

Meanwhile, Williams met Tuesday with corrections commissioner Bernie Robinson to be briefed on recent disturbances at the Oakalla women's prison in Burnaby.

The attorney-general said he asked for a fast report on what led to the disturbances and what has happened to the recommendations made by Justice Patricia Proudfoot in her report on conditions in women's prisons less than two years ago.

The attorney-general said he wants the whole issue fully aired.

Wood is cheaper but riskier: expert

By GEOFF HOARE

OTTAWA (CP) — Some of the thousands of people converting to wood heating will get their fingers burned, literally. Their homes might burn, too.

Gordon Flagler, author of a best-selling book on wood heat, says although it is cosy, ecologically sound and relatively inexpensive, a woodburning appliance can be dangerous in careless hands.

Flagler says many Canadians have lost respect for fire in our push-button age.

The Canadian Wood Heat Book (Deneau and Greenberg, $8.95) is full of tips on how to select, install, operate and maintain a wood stove or heater. It also has information on what kind of wood to use, where to find it and even how to cut it. A major theme is safety.

"Wood heating involves patience,' says Flagler. "It's not for everybody."

This advice notwithstanding, the use of wood heat is increasing spectacularly, especially in the East. Some 24,000 more people than last year heat entirely with wood, and Statistics Canada says around 500,000 homes now are at least partially heated with wood.

Last year the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp. published a booklet called Heating With Wood — Safely and more than 100,000 copies were distributed by retailers and fire marshals. The supply ran out in July.

Flagler says the current boom is only the tip of the iceberg. "People are slow to change — they need convincing. When their heating bill skyrockets, they're convinced."

The boom has officials worried about woodburners.

A woodburning appliance tester at the Canadian Standards Association in Toronto says, "All the appliances have one major defect — they have no control over their owners."

Faulty installation, operation and maintenance are the main sources of danger. Many wood-heat converts are do-it-yourselfers who install the appliances too close to walls or furniture. Others use old chimneys with inadequate air flow.

Many areas require a building permit for alterations to home heating systems but few people bother with the paper work, officials say.

Robert Trudel, chief inspector at the Ottawa Fire Prevention Bureau, says a building permit is "the best fire insurance prospective wood burners can buy" because it ensures that equipment is installed safely.

A major operating and maintenance problem is buildup in stove pipes and chimneys of a black powder called creosote, which consists of condensed particles of unburned organic vapors. A thick buildup can choke off smoke flow and reduce heating efficiency.

Novices may build a huge fire to offset the reduced output and ignite the creosote, producing sparks that can cause fires both in and outside the home.

Flagler says many people buy larger models than they need. When they burn wood at a lower temperature than they would with a smaller unit, creosote builds up. This also happens when new, high-efficiency, airtight heaters are run at low heat.

Carter supported

NEW YORK (Reuter) — The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has called on its 405,000 members to support the reelection of President Carter.

Valcourt suffers first-round loss

Salt Spring Island director Yvette Valcourt appears to have lost the first round in her bid to have the Capital Region District halt all health, building and occupancy permits in Ganges.

And it appears an application by the Duncan Credit Union to move from a complex owned by the Valcourt family to a building owned by DevCorp of Vancouver on McPhillips Avenue in Ganges will go ahead.

Valcourt sent telegrams to board members and Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm after she received a letter from regional board chairman Jim Campbell in which he said the credit union would not be refused an occupancy permit because the building is nearly finished and already partly occupied.

The letter says the building is therefore not a proposed development.

"I cannot see that there is any case to withhold an occupancy permit as long as the ordinary requirements of the building bylaws are complied with. It is quite clear to me that the motion referred to does not apply to this building," Campbell told Valcourt.

STOL site still up in air

A report listing several possible terminal sites for a downtown-to-downtown air service between Victoria and Vancouver will be released after the Feb. 18 federal election, Transport Canada spokesman Stephen Rybak said Tuesday.

Rybak said the report, which lists possible sites for a STOL (short take-off and landing) service and a vertical, or helicopter, take-off and landing service, is being studied by department officials in Ottawa.

He denied earlier stories which said the report had selected Work Point for the Victoria terminal but was unable to find any sites in Vancouver.

"The report is an economical and technical feasibility study only," he said. "It lists several possible sites in Vancouver and Victoria but does not select any one site over another."

Further engineering and cost studies would have to be conducted before sites could be chosen, he said.

The proposed new air services would involve 50-seat planes which could operate year-round and in all weather conditions.

Current harbor-to-harbor floatplane flights between the two cities can be made only in daylight and when visibility is good.

Meanwhile, Ald. Robin Blencoe has reacted angrily to a suggestion by Victoria MP Allan McKinnon that Saanich should be the site of a STOL airport.

McKinnon said Saanich appears to be the only place left and "they've got farmland there they wouldn't mind having paved over."

Blencoe called McKinnon's suggestion ludicrous.

"How a cabinet minister can talk about using valuable agriculture lands . . . I find somewhat irresponsible."

Blencoe said Greater Victoria doesn't need STOL aircraft in any event.

"We have got enough aircraft flying over the city creating incredible dangers already," he said, adding the STOL plane is a high consumer of fuel and planners should be looking to more efficient means of transportation.

CNR link to mean increased traffic

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadian National Railways will start work in the spring on a $28-million, three-year project to link its main line to Vancouver with the railway's northern line to Prince Rupert.

Ross Walker, CN's mountain region vice-president, said the link will be accomplished by building a 20-kilometre north-south connection between the two lines at a spot about 50 kilometres east of Red Pass junction, where the two lines join.

The link will make it possible for CN to run mainline traffic over part of the northern line, effectively double-tracking a key section of the heavily-used main rail route to Vancouver.

Lightweight rail on the affected section of the northern line will be replaced by heavier track.

East-west debate at university

Top student debaters from eastern Canada will take on their Victoria counterparts tonight and Thursday.

Nine debaters from Dalhousie, the University of Western Ontario and the University of Toronto are expected to give debaters from UVic, Pearson College and Norfolk House and Oak Bay high schools a challenge.

Chamkaur Cheema, president of the UVic debating club, says the quality of competition should be first class.

"The Dalhousie debaters are the best in eastern Canada and the local university debaters rank second in the west," he said.

The first debate takes place tonight at 6:45 p.m. in Room 108 of the Cornett Building on campus.

The main debate takes place Thursday at 12:30 p.m. in the Student Union Building.

Rather than using judges, the audience's response will determine the winner, said Cheema.

CRD offered Metchosin park worth $300,000

The Capital Regional District has been offered a 25-acre $300,000 park in the Sherwood Pond area of Metchosin on William Head Road.

The regional district's parks committee was told Tuesday the Devonian Foundation of Calgary has bought 100 acres in the area for $925,000 and is willing to give $200,000 toward the cost of the 25 acres.

Lands, Parks and Housing Minister Jim Chabot in a letter his ministry would consider the park proposal to be eligible for a $100,000 provincial grant under the regional parks program.

Executive director Dennis Young noted that one of the conditions laid down by the foundation is that the CRD spend $50,000 on development and maintenace during the next few years.

Chairman Shirley Dowell said the regional district already has 12 major parks and such a sum "would have a significant impact on our budget." She suggested municipalities be approached and asked if the half-mill allotted for regional parks could be increased.

But the committee was told that development and maintenance would need less than $50,000 in the initial stages because the policy is to keep regional parks as natural as possible.

The Devonian Foundation, a non-profit organization that provides funds for acquisition of parkland across Canada, intends to apply for subdivision in 10-acre lots for the remainder of the land in order to retrieve the purchase price.

The committee decided to pursue the matter further and have staff compile a report.

PVI talks continue

VANCOUVER (CP) — Talks aimed at resolving a contract dispute at the strike-bound Pacific Vocational Institute were continuing today, following an overnight bargaining session between school officials and instructors represented by the B.C. Government Employees Union.

Tom Lownie, acting principal, said progress during talks was encouraging but would not elaborate.

"There's no break yet, but talks are still going on," he said.

Only three major issues — none of them involving money items — were reported still under discussion.,

Talks resumed Tuesday at the suggestion of the provincial labor relations board after it rejected an administration application for a cease-and-desist order against the strike.

Poison for wolves confirmed

By JAKE BANKY

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers orderd the B.C. Fish and Wildlife Branch Tuesday to reapply for a permit to poison bears, wolves and coyotes that threaten livestock in some areas of the province.

Environmental groups have vociferously opposed the use of poison.

The Pesticide Control Appeal Board recently rejected a Fish and Wildlife application for a blanket permit to use the poison 1080 (sodium monofluoroacetate) for predator control anywhere in the province. Regulations demand the application specify where the poison will be used.

Rogers said the new application will be more specific as to location.

"Although this may restrict our predator control program in new problem areas, it should at least enable the branch to effect adequate predator control where livestock losses are already a chronic problem," he stated.

Rogers also defended the use of 1080 as more effective and safer to humans than either cyanide or strychnine. Claims that 1080 is cruel and causes a hideous death are not borne out by the facts, he said.

He also pointed out the Fish and Wildlife Branch expects to use no more than five grams of 1080 during a full year of predator control.

"Compare this amount with the two to three metric tonnes of 1080 that are used each year in New Zealand for pest control and you can see that we are not going overboard in our use of this pesticide. It's use is very tightly controlled," he said.

The minister predicted about 200 of the estimated 6,000 wolves in B.C. will be killed in 1980 as a result of the government's predator control program.

"Given the fact that wolves have a remarkably high rate of population growth . . . it is clear that these limited control measures do not pose any threat whatsoever to the continued existence of these animals," he said.

7% for non-union city staff urged

A proposed salary increase for all management and non-union staff at city hall totalling seven per cent goes before Victoria city council Thursday night.

The 1980 pay increase, approved at an in camera meeting of the personnel committee last week, would be five per cent plus a new fringe benefit equal to two per cent of the new base pay.

It may be taken in the form of an additional week's holidays or as cash.

The committee also sweetened the vacation schedule. Staff with one to 10 years' service will be eligible for four weeks holidays. Those with 11 to 20 years will get five weeks and anyone with more than 20 years' employment with the city will get six weeks.

Previously, only department heads were eligible for a month's annual vacation.

The committee also voted to hire municipal personnel consultant Gordon Newhouse to make a review of all management positions and job descriptions.

However, committee chairman Ald. Gretchen Brewin, who voted against the selection, said today she will ask council to invite tenders from several consultants.

The vote in committee was not unanimous, she said, and she opposed making a choice without knowing how much it would cost.

Newhouse has done work for the city in the past. A previous controversial Newhouse report resulted in the elimination of the city clerk's position and absorption of his duties by the city manager's office. He also did a review of the personnel department.

Ald. Brewin said the salary levels and job descriptions of management people at city hall haven't been reviewed for more than a decade.

It was a period when considerable changes in roles and responsibilities took place.

The consultant would draft new job descriptions and make a comparison of duties and salaries with other similarly-sized municipalities, Brewin said.

Tax hike eyed for transit loss

Capital Regional District ratepayers may be hit by a two-mill surcharge on their property taxes to cover an anticipated $2.3 million public transit deficit this year.

Several members of the regional district's transit planning and management committee said Wednesday this is the best way to cover the deficit.

Previously the directors were considering a three-cents-per-gallon surcharge as the first stage in covering the deficit when the CRD, under a provincial government edict, takes over public transit.

Board chairman Jim Campbell said he favors a levy on property in the first year and, when service is improved, then a gas surcharge and finally, increases in electricity bills, as set out by the government.

Committee chairman Mayor Norma Sealey of Sidney has previously said she favors the property levy, rather than the increase in gas prices. Langford director Ed Lubick said he wants to see improved service before a gas surcharge goes into effect.

But Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier accused some directors of filibustering and said he doesn't want Saanich taxpayers to find themselves with increased property taxes "by default" when it had been expected a gas price hike was to be used to cover the deficit.

He said the regional district should show leadership by improving transit and levying a gas tax which would reduce traffic on the roads, thus cutting costs of road maintenance.

He failed in a bid to have a special debate on the subject but directors agreed to discuss the matter at next Wednesday's regular meeting. A staff report was asked for on the pros and cons of increases in property taxes or gas prices.

Larry Miller, assistant general manager of the Urban Tranport Authority, told directors a preliminary report on transit planning will be ready Feb. 5 and a detailed service plan with bus-stop details and draft operating schedules will be ready four weeks later.

Loss of sea view worries residents

Oak Bay council has indicated it will tread lightly in the block along Beach Drive bounded by Goodwin Street and Currie Road, an area of older low-rise apartment buildings.

Aldermen anticipated the owners could soon decide to redevelop the area or offer it as a package to a development company. A new bylaw was prepared to ensure that future development is compatible with the environment and meets high standards of design and construction.

The existing bylaw allows low-density apartment construction up to four storeys, and this alarms Goodwin Street residents who would lose sea views if such buildings were allowed.

Residents want any new construction limited to 33 feet or three storeys, with adequate setbacks from the street and underground parking.

Mayor Douglas Watts warned that council would be tying its hands by including a height limitation, as it might deter a high-quality development.

Aldermen agreed to delay final approval of the bylaw until planners working on the municipality's official community plan have studied the block thoroughly.

Most oppose unified force

OTTAWA (CP) — A survey of the armed forces shows the overwhelming majority of servicemen want different uniforms and a separate identity for land, air and sea units despite more than 10 years of unification, the Royal Canadian Air Force Association said Tuesday.

The airmen told the government study group on armed forces unification that a 1977 study shows that more than 80 per cent of servicemen "wish to retain the links with the past in both badges and accoutrements."

A lower proportion — 63.8 per cent — wanted a separate uniform for army, navy and air force.

The association called for distinct army, navy and air force services with a joint chiefs of staff headed by the chief of defence staff. The head of each element — army, navy and air force — would be able to go directly to the defence minister if he had a major disagreement with the chief of defence staff.

The group, which represents 14,000 serving and retired airmen, also attacked what it said was the growing power of civilian defence employees in running the military.

The Land Ordnance Engineering Association, representing army engineers, defended unification but suggested changes to ensure an effective military staff system. Having Mobile Command, or army, headquarters at St. Hubert, Que., rather than Ottawa creates friction, the engineering group said.

Retired Brig.-Gen. B.A. Howard of Toronto, a spokesman for the air group, said airmen need a strong sense of identity to improve morale. He acknowledged reductions in spending and manpower have also affected morale in the forces.

He said a 1977 study by a student at the National Defence College found servicemen are "seeking an identity which is not . . . being provided by the Canadian armed forces and the green uniform." The green uniform is common to all members of the 79,000-force.

Even in the lower ranks, where most have served only since unification, most people wanted a separate identity, he said.

Asked how many people were surveyed, Howard said 72 per cent of the armed forces replied to a questionnaire on the identity issue.

Housing industry gloomy

CALGARY (CP) — An optimistic view of Canada's house-building industry shows it heading into its worst period in 10 years, a spokesman for the Mortgage Insurance Co. of Canada said Tuesday.

The situation is not good and "it will get worse before it gets better," said Claude Renaud, director of business development for the company.

The money currently going into single-family housing is only a third of the 1976-78 level; multiple-unit housing is crippled by cancellation of federal tax incentives; and high interest rates are restricting commercial and industrial properties.

Speaking to the annual meeting of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, Renaud predicted worse to come.

"Housing starts in the first three months of this year are likely to be 25 per cent below last year and, if they are, it will be the lowest quarterly housing starts figure of the decade, only comparable to the first three months of 1978."

But despite such gloomy short-term forecasts, he said there are reasons for optimism in the longer term.

Renaud noted that Canada's labor force is the youngest of any industrialized country.

"As soon as the current epidemic of strikes is over with and new investments are made, productivity will increase."

He said several factors will boost the housing industry during the next two years:

— Interest rates will fall by this summer as banks find they must charge lower interest to attract borrowers but do not need to pay as high interest to get depositors.

— Inventories of unsold housing stock will diminish.

— Land prices will remain stable relative to house prices, at about a third to half the cost of the building.

— Condominium popularity will rise as developers produce better-designed and located buildings.

— "New, innovative mortgage repayment plans are proliferating like well-fed rabbits."

However, he said rental units will continue to be weak because of interest rates, high cost of downtown land, government polices favoring home ownership and continued rent controls in many areas.

Federal estimates cited at the conference were that 1.17 million new housing units are needed in the 1976-81 period with demand to fall to 1.04 million in 1981-86, 989,000 in 1986-91, 872,000 in 1991-96 and 849,000 1996-2001.

Several analysts, however, saw room for hope within the context of declining demand based on declining domestic population growth.

"There could well be a massive change in the population structure because of immigration," said Michael Walker, executive director of Vancouver's Fraser Institute.

Labor shortages, he said, will create pressure on the government to relax immigration restrictions imposed in the 1970s and thus could overturn pessimistic forecasts based on internal population growth.

Money fears

OTTAWA (CP) - Consumer confidence dropped sharply in the last three months of 1979, the Conference Board in Canada reported today in its latest survey of consumer buying intentions.

The survey, conducted before the federal budget and the defeat of the government in mid-December, showed the index fell to a 20-year low of 79.9, seasonally-adjusted, in the fourth quarter from 107.4 in the third quarter.

Levels in excess of 100 were recorded through most of 1978 and 1979, a sign that consumer willingness to buy had strengthened from the 1975-77 period.

Charles Barrett, director of general economic analysis for the board, a non-profit research organization, said "it reinforces the general anticipation of an economic slowdown.

The Bank of Canada rate was raised twice in the fourth quarter to a record 14 per cent and, along with increased consumer fears of rising inflation, created greater unwillingness by people to spend their incomes.

The survey shows that 45.7 per cent expect economic conditions to worsen in the next six months and 53.6 per cent expect inflation to increase.

Consumers are also more pessimistic about job prospects and the financial position of their families, with the proportion who expect improved family income falling to 23 per cent from 25.5 per cent.

Vote ad misled many

TORONTO (CP) — Advertisements urging people to telephone their returning office if they have not received a card confirming that they are on the voters' list for the Feb. 18 federal election have confused hundreds and jammed returning office telephone lines.

"Have You Got This Card? If not, you may lose your right to vote," the ads warn.

But they hit radio and television last weekend and appeared in newspapers Tuesday and again today — well before many of the enumeration cards were delivered.

So the ads, intended for voters just turned 18, new Canadian citizens or persons who had moved, hit a much wider mark.

"One third of our calls were unnecessary, said Lesley Singer, returning officer for Spadina riding. "If the postal service provided next-day service like it's supposed to, everything would have been OK, but with the mail delivery what it is, that was the problem."

The advertisement was placed after Jean-Marc Hamel, Canada's chief electoral officer, decided to do away with a $17-million door-to-door enumeration this time, so soon after that done for last May's election.

Guilty verdicts in break-in

A county court jury returned guilty verdicts Tuesday night against three persons after seven hours and 50 minutes deliberation.

Lori Still, 25, and Robert John Woolcock, 23, were found guilty of breaking and entering Fay's Brentwood Dry Cleaners, 7183 West Saanich, with intent to commit an indictable offence around midnight June 19.

They were stopped by police half a mile from the Brentwood Shopping Centre.

John James Pilatzke, 33, pleaded guilty to the same offence at the start of the five-day trial. He was found guilty of the separate offence of possession of a steel file for the purpose of committing an assault.

He was arrested inside the store after Constable Neil Laing of Central Saanich police first ordered him to drop the file, then fired two warning shots and finally two shots which struck Pilatzke in the chest and shoulder.

In what Judge Montague Drake described as unusual but quite proper, each juror was polled at the request of the defence and gave individual verdicts of guilty following the traditional collective verdict indicated by all jurors standing up.

Woolcock and Still will be sentenced by Drake Thursday and Pilatzke will be sentenced Jan. 31.

Before the judge

After more than five weeks of a preliminary hearing, 23 men charged following last May's seizure of 33 tons of marijuana were committed for higher court trial by Judge Reg Grandison in Victoria provincial court on Tuesday.

Grandison, brought in from the Mainland to sit for the hearing, committed all 15 Colombians, seven Americans, and one Costa Rican for trial on three counts: importing marijuana into Canada between April 1 and May 23, 1979; possessing marijuana on the territorial sea of Canada off the coast of B.C. for the purpose of trafficking; and possessing marijuana in the county of Nanaimo for the purpose of trafficking, all contrary to the Narcotic Control Act.

In addition, Grandison committed five of the Americans for trial on a charge of conspiracy to import marijuana into Canada, contrary to the Criminal Code.

They were: 34-year-old William Francis Perka of Port Townsend, Wash.; 27-year-old Paul Oscar Nelson of Seattle and Marina del Rey, Calif.; 28-year-old Michael Walter Butler of Westport, Wash.; 37-year-old Jaime Marin of Marina del Rey; and 39-year-old Albergipson Frasser-Afanador of Los Angeles.

The other Americans committed on the first three charges are 39-year-old William Terry Hines of San Rafael, Calif., and 22-year-old Stephen Earl Johnson of Port Townsend.

The Colombians facing the three charges are 37-year-old Abraham Angulo-Cuero, 46-year-old Severo Guerrero, 29-year-old Jaime Gutierrez, 31-year-old Pedro Nel Valez-Toscano, 23-year-old Johny Alberto Calzada, and 34-year-old Segundo Ismael Quinones-Landazuri, all of Buena Ventura, 20-year-old Edgar Barragan-Escobar and 26-year-old Uriel de Jesus Taborda-Gomez of Bogota, 34-year-old Hugo Alberto Ortiz-Mosquera, 37-year-old Hernando de Jesus Hernandez-Alvarez, and 27-year-old Holmes Gomez-Rodriguez, all of Cali, 26-year-old Ariel de Jesus Moncada-Guevara of Brisalda, 31-year-old George Christopher of San Andres Island, 59-year-old Marco Antonio Lopera-Penagos of Mellin, and 60-year-old Ebert Forbes-MacNis of Santa Cruz.

Special Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald entered a stay of proceedings on a charge of entering Canada illegally on or about May 22.

All were charged following a land-sea operation near Sydney Inlet north of Tofino in which a Canadian Forces vessel, the destroyer HMCS Qu'Appelle, Canadian Forces personnel, and RCMP were involved.

Judge Harold Alder ordered 29-year-old Ernest Joseph Leblanc, 3267 Galloway, to stand trial after defence lawyer David Lisson waived a preliminary hearing.

Leblanc was charged with two counts of armed robbery in connection with an Aug. 7 holdup at the University Heights Safeway and one four days later at the Town and Country Safeway.

Lisson had elected trial by judge without jury on Aug. 20 and a hearing had been set for Tuesday afternoon.

Judge Blake Allan denied a defence motion for a discharge, fined a 17-year-old and gave him community service work to do.

Allan accepted defence lawyer William McElmoyle's application to plead guilty on behalf of Jeffrey Ross Tucker, 962 Island, to the lesser-included offence of common assault.

Tucker had originally pleaded not guilty to assault causing bodily harm.

Crown counsel Richard Law told the court Tucker and another youth was involved in an Oct. 20 incident near the Oak Bay Marina in which a 16-year-old acquaintence of Tucker's was punched in the face and suffered a broken nose and black eye. Tucker told Oak Bay police the incident started over bumping while the victim was making a phone call.

McElmoyle said the incident was unpremeditated and that there had been prior, hostile feelings between the principals.

"He's lucky to get off with common assault," Allan said in denying a discharge. "There's no doubt in my mind about that."

Allan imposed a $100 fine, placed Tucker on six months probation, and ordered him to perform 50 hours of community service work.

Fined $350 for having care and control of a motor vehicle with a blood-alcohol reading over .08 was 24-year-old David Allan Stone, 2364 Galena.

Two years for heroin possession

A 34-year-old Vancouver man was sentenced in Victoria county court Tuesday to two years less one day in jail for possession of 39 capsules of heroin for the purpose of trafficking in Campbell River on Sept. 4.

Judge Peter Millward told Michael John Skitt he was an intelligent man of some sophistication who has chosen a course of life which has led to a long history of criminal conduct including the use of heroin.

He said there appeared to be no indication of an intention or desire to reform.

Millward noted Skitt has spent the last four months in custody and said at least jail will keep him out of circulation and hopefully this and the sentence will be a deterrent to others.

Caught with pot

TOKYO (Reuter) — Former Beatle Paul McCartney was detained by customs officers today for possessing marijuana when he arrived at Tokyo airport from New York for a concert tour, the airport customs office said.

A spokesman for the office said that about eight ounces of marijuana were found when customs officers inspected his suitcase.

The 37-year-old musician, now leader of the group Wings, was later handed over to the regional narcotics control office in Tokyo for further questioning on suspicion of violating customs and narcotics-control laws, the spokesman said.

He was accompanied by his wife Linda and four children and members of Wings for an 11-stop tour which has now been cancelled.

Mugabe defying truce: Soames

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — British authorities accused Robert Mugabe's Patriotic Front guerrillas of violating Rhodesia's ceasefire repeatedly and planning a campaign of intimidation in the coming national election.

The charges against Mugabe's wing of the Front were leveled Tuesday in a statement that also vigorously rejected criticism of British Governor Lord Soames.

Mugabe's partner in the Front, Joshua Nkomo, and leaders of black African states charged it was the British who violated the truce agreement by using Rhodesian troops and South Africans to police the ceasefire.

Nick Fenn, Lord Soames' chief spokesman, read the statement saying: "Who would have supposed a month ago that the ceasefire would have made such giant strides, that casualties would have been so low and that a nation just emerging from a war would have been addressing with so much confidence the approaching election?

"Lord Soames means business and intends to succeed."

Lord Soames came to Rhodesia to oversee the ceasefire that ended seven years of civil war between black nationalists and a white-dominated government that was later succeeded by black Prime Minister Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

As part of the truce agreement, Muzorewa resigned, turning power over to Lord Soames until national elections to elect a prime minister.

The statement blamed guerrillas of the Zimbabwe African National Liberation Army, the military arm of Mugabe's party, for many of the cease-fire violations.

In particular, Britain accused Mugabe's faction of sending "a considerable number" of men and women into the cease-fire camps who were not genuine guerrillas, while keeping the real fighters hidden in the bush.

"It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that their objective is to carry out intimidation during the election campaign," the statement said, referring to Mugabe's guerrillas.

The statement also cited "evidence of substantial border crossing" by Mozambique-based guerrillas despite a ban on infiltration.

$2M stolen from plane hold

ROME (AP) — Two daring thieves dressed in airport uniforms and carrying a two-way radio today halted a Swissair jetliner about to take off from Rome's Leonardo da Vinci Airport, opened its cargo compartment and stole two pouches containing almost $2.2 million in cash, police reported.

The stolen money was not Italian lire, but it was not immediately known what currencies were involved.

Police said the robbers in a small Fiat truck marked "A. R." for the Airport of Rome radioed the pilot from the truck to halt its takeoff for an urgent check of leaking fuel. They then sped to the plane, opened the cargo hold and stole the bags of a currency shipping firm.

Apparently without realizing what had happened, the plane took off after receiving a go-ahead from the robbers.

The robbery was discovered after the DC-9 with 39 passengers aboard arrived in Zurich, airport sources said.

Once airborne, the pilot told the control tower that he had just undergone a check of leaking gasoline, only to be told that none of the airport workers had been ordered to make such an inspection, the sources said.

GOOD STUFF indicates Pierre Trudeau with a friendly pat on the chin for a supporter in Saskatoon. Trudeau is campaigning in Saskatchewan for a couple of days before pushing on to Vancouver.

Journalists not welcome

SASKATOON (CP) — Pierre Trudeau says he's ready to debate Prime Minister Clark "at any time and anywhere" but he does not want journalists involved in the confrontation.

"I have lots of points I would like to make to Mr. Clark about the way in which he has mismanaged the nation's affairs for seven months," Trudeau said.

"I'm anxious to have a debate which would be a debate on issues," Trudeau said at that time. "I'm prepared to participate in one, either one on one with the other leaders but on issues, not with the media once again, but just with my opponents."

High jobless rate Grits' fault: NDP

SYDNEY, N.S. (UPC) — The national unemployment rate now hovering at 7.1 per cent is a "national disgrace" and the only one to blame is the former Liberal government, said NDP leader Ed Broadbent.

Broadbent put the blame squarely on the shoulders of Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau and told more than 700 supporters Tuesday that between 1970 and 1977 unemployment increased by 72 percent across Canada and 161 per cent in the Atlantic Provinces.

Buoyed by cheering steelworkers, a fiddler and a piano player, Broadbent mocked Trudeau for his concern over the unemployment rate during a recent speech in southern Ontario and promising to reduce it if he was returned to power.

"In a country with as many resources as Canada, this unemployment rate is a national disgrace and the disgrace is due to the Liberal Party and no one else," he said.

Broadbent estimated there are close to 1.3 million people out of work. About 120,000 have simply given up looking for work because they are "tired battering their heads against the door and being turned down."

"These people aren't even included in the official statistics," Broadbent said, adding that people aren't interested in government handouts, they want to work.

Statistics Canada reported that the seasonally-adjusted rate of unemployment dipped to 7.1 per cent last month, down from 8.1 per cent in December 1978.

This is the third consecutive month unemployment rates have dropped, however unemployment in Nova Scotia remains at the 1978 level of 9.9 per cent.

During a luncheon speech to more than 250 businessmen at the Halifax board of trade, Broadbent said unemployment could be brought down to 6 per cent in two years and to four per cent by 1984 if there was a full employment program under an industrial strategy.

Canadian politicians should follow the American example and debate unemploymnt targets annually, Broadbent said.

During his speech, Broadbent called for greater regional assistance for the Atlantic Provinces, an expanded role for the Canadian Development Corporation to develop jobs and, a national fisheries board to help find international markets for East and West coast fishermen.

The NDP leader also revived a May election commitment and promised $150 million in assistance to modernize the badly outdated Sydney Steel Corp.

During the second day of his election swing through Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, Broadbent visited a downtown shopping mall and continued to criticize the Liberals and Conservatives for having virtually the same programs.

The NDP is riding high on a dramatic increase in popular support in Nova Scotia shown during the May election and there was hope the party will add to the one seat held by the Catholic priest from Cape Breton, Andy Hogan.

The NDP support increased from slightly less than 11 percent to more than 20 percent during the May election.

The NDP leader will visit Quebec City before flying to Winnipeg today.

Expenditures 'rise five-fold'

CAMPBELLTON, N.B. (CP) — Government expenditures increased five fold while Pierre Trudeau was prime minister, Treasury Board President Sinclair Stevens said Tuesday.

Speaking to party faithful he said the government's expenditure was $10 billion when Trudeau became prime minister but increased to $50 billion by the time of his defeat.

Vancouver-Tokyo railway?

REGINA (UPC) — A born-again western faction of the Rhinoceros Party has decided to campaign for a railway line linking Vancouver to Tokyo.

In a western policy conference Monday, the Rhinos decided their party was too eastern-oriented, and voted to form the New Improved Rhinoceros Party of Canada.

Michael Kotyk, a University of Regina student, outlined the Rhinoceros rump group's platform:

"In order to remove shipping hassles at the western ports, we will build a rail link across the Pacific to Japan; we will revise the Official Languages Act, giving Canada five official languages, Polish, Ukrainian, Yugoslavian, Danish and Inuit; and to complete the package, we will insist on five-sided cornflake boxes.

Cut interest rate: Roy

MONTREAL (CP) — Social Credit Leader Fabien Roy says the first step toward solving Canada's economic ills is to cut interest rates to encourage spending and job creation.

Speaking to students Tuesday at the Universite de Montreal, Roy listed two other major requirements for Canadian economic recovery.

A five-year plan must be put together that would lead to a balanced budget, ending the deficit spending that has been government policy since the Second World War.

Finally, Roy said, something must be done about Canada's balance of payments deficit.

PM's jet leaks gas

HAMILTON (CP) — Prime Minister Clark and about 50 aides and reporters were forced to evacuate the Progressive Conservative election campaign jet aircraft Tuesday when fuel began gushing from the left wing as it was preparing for takeoff from Mount Hope airport.

The reporters, who noticed the fuel discharging only minutes before the jet was to fly to Regina, alerted the crew, prompting Capt. Ric Morrow of the Air Canada-chartered DC-9 to order the evacuation.

Clark and the other passengers took refuge in the airport terminal while fire trucks sprayed a white chemical foam on the pool of fuel, which grew to the size of a tennis court.

Water was also hosed on the aircraft exterior to reduce the chances of a fire.

TV networks still trying

TORONTO (CP) — Canada's television networks, which had given the Liberals until last Friday to accept their proposals for an election debate, extended that deadline Tuesday by asking the party to reconsider its rejection of the proposal.

In a telex, the networks — CBC, CTV, Global, Radio-Canada and TVA — suggested likely topics to be discussed at the proposed Encounter '80, including the economy and interest rates, energy policy and oil prices, Confederation and constitutional reform and recent problems in Asia.

The final list of topics could be revised and sent to the party leaders about two days before the debate, the telex said. Reporters, cued by a moderator, would ask questions to move the leaders' discussion through the agenda.

The Liberals said in rejecting the proposal last Friday that the earlier format focused primarily on personalities rather than the issues in the Feb. 18 election campaign.

The networks first proposed that the debate take the same form as the one held before the May 22 election. It would have allowed three separate debates with a one-to-one confrontation between Prime Minister Clark, Liberal Leader Pierre Trudeau and NDP Leader Ed Broadbent.

Gordon Ashworth, Liberal executive campaign director, said last week the party did not want reporters involved.

"It's a debate, not a two-hour news conference," he said.

The networks said their new proposal was close to what the Liberals wanted and hoped it "may enable the Liberal party to accept participation in Encounter '80 in the very scant time remaining for the decision to be taken."

Half to get easier tax forms

OTTAWA (CP) — About half of income taxpayers may have an easier time filling out their tax returns this year.

Revenue Canada has almost finished mailing a special new form — a page shorter than the previous four-page return — to eight million individuals who reported only a limited number of earnings, deductions and exemptions in 1978.

The remainder of 15 million individuals will have to use the regular form.

But there's a catch. Those receiving the new form cannot use it if they have more complicated tax affairs this year. Instead, they have to pick up the regular return at post offices and district taxation offices.

Tax officials say they hastened introduction of the special return because the tax system has become more complex.

For instance, more than 1.5 million of the eight million people eligible for the new form pay no income tax but, as of 1977, had to file to receive child and property tax credits.

"It's especially for people with simple situations, "says Bruce Macdonald, deputy minister of revenue, pointing out that 60 per cent of taxpayers do not claim for widely-advertised tax shelters such as registered retirement savings plans.

Only salary and wage earners — not self-employed taxpayers — can use the special return to calculate basic earnings, family exemptions and interest, education and pension deductions.

Those who have to report capital gains and losses, dividends, child care expenses, registered retirement and home owneship savings plans and other income or deduction items must use the regular form which includes an 11-page supplement for recording exemptions, deductions and credits.

If taxpayers try to use the special form to complete a regular return, the department will either make its own adjustments or make them file again using the regular form.

Because all returns are checked by tax officials at an early stage, Macdonald said it will be easy to spot those who have used the new form incorrectly.

The department will know next month, when most returns start coming in, if the new form causes problems. "It may not cause confusion," Macdonald said.

Officials estimate the special form, which uses less paper for its instruction guide, cut printing costs by as much as $1 million since these rose by 15 per cent this year. The cost of printing and distributing 14.8 million personal and seven million general forms was $8.1 million, up from $7.9 million last year.

One potential headache which the department faces before the April 30 filing deadline is confusion over the federal mortgage interest and property tax credit, a plan which died with the government defeat last month.

Distribution of the tax forms, to be completed by the end of this month, is a month behind schedule because the department waited for passage of the tax credit.

The form for claiming the credit, printed with the other tax forms last fall, was removed from half the returns a few days after the government fell.

But the department will not advertise during the election to warn those who received the form against claiming the credit. "We might contemplate it later," said Macdonald, "We'll try to assess how confused people are."

'No doubt of guilt'

TORONTO (CP) — A Crown attorney told an Ontario Supreme Court jury Tuesday it should have no doubt that two men charged with murdering a Hudson's Bay store employee in 1978 are guilty.

Mike Lynch told he jury he is confident "we've satisfied you beyond a reasonable doubt" of the guilt of Tony Genovese, 33, also known as Frank Lukes of Cleveland, and Glen Flett, 29, of Victoria.

Ted Van Sluytman was gunned down as he tried to stop one of two robbers who were fleeing the suburban store after a $46,000 holdup.

Canadian arm on sky shuttle

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — A Canadian-made space arm, the most sophisticated device on the U.S. space shuttle, makes the program economically feasible, astronaut Lt.-Col. John Fabian said Tuesday.

Fabian, a mission specialist in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shuttle program, was speaking to the London branch of the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario.

Also present was Malcolm Hinds, marketing manager for Spar Aerospace Ltd. of Toronto, the designer and builder of the arm, or remote manipulator system.

Fabian has just completed a simulation exercise with the arm at Spar.

He said NASA is selling cargo space on the shuttle, which may be launched this year or next, and is fully booked for five years. Among the customers is Telesat, Canada's communications satellite company.

He said the shuttle can carry as many as 12 satellites and, with the arm, deposit them in orbit. It can also retrieve satellites or other pieces of space equipment.

Hinds said Spar has a $60-million NASA contract for three more arms and that may be doubled by 1985.

He said the arm, which is 15 metres long and weighs 400 kilograms, is not powerful enough to lift its own weight on earth. But in the weightlessness of space, it can handle cargoes of about 30,000 kilos.

Tank crews get job by computer

TEL AVIV (Reuter) — Israeli tank crews will in future be selected by computer on the basis of their personalities, mutual compatibility and individual preferences, the head of the army psychological department said Friday.

Reuben Gal told local radio the Israeli Army will [illegible] base its choice of tank crews on personality profiles prepared by computer.

Magazine runs secret report on Soviet spying

TORONTO (CP) — A secret RCMP report describing Soviet intelligence activities in Canada has been published by This Magazine after an Ontario court ruled it was not covered by the Official Secrets Act.

The document — prepared by the RCMP's security service in 1976 — is stamped Top Secret, For Canadian Eyes Only although 67 copies were distributed to ministers, deputy ministers and government agencies.

It also apparently was to be given to friendly intelligence services in other countries, such as the United States and Britain. The report clearly warns that it is being provided "on condition that it is for use solely by the intelligence community of the receiving government and that it not be declassified without the express permission of the government of Canada."

It provides a detailed look at both open and undercover activities by Soviet agents who are interested in Canada or who use the country as a haven for staging operations against a third country.

As well as keeping abreast of developments in Canada, Soviet intelligence apparently is interested in what information Canadians can provide about such subjects as U.S. Central Intelligence Agency operations in Moscow and trade between China and Canada.

Among the specific claims made by the RCMP report are the following:

—The Soviet consul-general in Montreal is a key intelligence operative with access to MPs, businessmen, academics and others in the "highest levels of Canadian society."

—The Soviets have modified their tactics so as not to harm the climate of diplomatic detente, but they still direct covert activities in Canada, sometimes with the aid of East European an Cuban allies.

—Five of 40 Soviet delegates to the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal are "known or suspected" intelligence operatives.

—Several employees of the Canadian embassy in Moscow have fallen victim to Soviet "entrapment."

After a preliminary hearing last April, Judge Carl Waisberg of the Ontario provincial court decided that the RCMP report had become "shopworn" and was no longer secret because substantial sections had already been made public in the House of Commons and in a television show.

The confidential report was also mentioned in a story in the Toronto Sun, prompting the federal government to press charges against the newspaper for allegedly violating the Official Secrets Act. Judge Waisberg ruled that the Sun, its publisher Douglas Creighton and its editor Peter Worthington, should not be brought to trial on the charges, and the Crown did not appeal.

The Clark government had pledged before its defeat in the Commons to overhaul the 1939 Secrets Act in concert with freedom-of-information legislation introduced last fall. As well, the federal McDonald inquiry into RCMP wrongdoing recommended last Friday that the government make major changes in the Secrets Act.

This Magazine said in an editorial in its January-February issue that it decided to print the report because "Canadians must take the threat which the RCMP represents to both liberal and socialist values in this country much more seriously than we have done to date.

"Sufficient evidence is available to suggest that the force is up to far more harm than good," said the editorial in the Toronto-based magazine.

The 48-page tabloid, published every two months, receives financial support from the Canada Council and the Ontario Arts Council. It concentrates heavily on political economy and on the role of culture and schools in Canadian society.

The report is published with an introduction and commentary on the various sections by writer Ian Adams, a contributing editor of This Magazine. Adams suggests the document may have been "concocted" and leaked purposely by the RCMP in early 1978 to draw attention away from the McDonald commission and Quebec's Keable inquiry into illegal acts by the force.

The report says one key Soviet operative who has extensive contacts with MPs and in business and academic circles is Vladimar Ivanovich Gavryushkin, consul-general in Montreal since 1977.

It says Gavryushkin has been the representative in Canada since 1972 of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, which co-ordinates the operations of what are described as the "Russian Intelligence Services" — referred to as RIS.

In addition to overseeing Communist party meetings "in the Soviet 'Kolonies' in Ottawa and Montreal, Gavryushkin regularly counsels leading figures in the Communist Party of Canada, the Communist Party of Quebec, Canadian and Quebec trade unions," the report says.

He is often accompanied "by known or suspected RIS officers when attending political or labor conferences."

Gavryushkin represents what the report describes as a new trend in Soviet intelligence-collecting. Under the new guidelines, as much activity as possible is carried on openly, so as not to jeopardize the climate of detente that allows freer access to information sources.

"Overt tactics have led to the infusion into Canada of more sophisticated RIS officers able to interact with officials at the highest levels of Canadian society. Key targets of RIS activity are the business and academic communities, governmental and scientific elites, research establishments, unions, political parties and the military and ethnic communities."

The importance of preserving detente by not risking too many undercover operations is expressed by the Soviet ambassador to Canada "who has indicated that he is aware of the serious damage to bilateral relations that a hard intelligence break would bring.

"He has said privately that he is encouraging RIS operations to work more in the open."

The report indicates that while Soviet intelligence has moved into open operations, "certain activities necessary for the acquisition of 'hard' intelligence have been 'handed off' to the Warsaw Pact intelligence services, and to the Cuban Intelligence Service which assumed responsibility in June, 1975, for directing covert revolutionary activity in the Western hemisphere."

Besides diplomats and other officials, the report says Soviet intelligence services have "illegals" operating in Canada — spies under an assumed identity. They carry out spying under the guise of a legitimate occupation without ever going near the embassy.

"RIS illegals are trained extensively in espionage tradecraft and are then run and fully controlled by illicit broadcasts from Moscow."

"Of the 40 Soviets attached to the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal, five are known or suspected RIS officers. One, a KGB officer, is operationally active in Montreal where he has been described as being 'responsible for the illegal networks.'

"RIS 'illegals' have used Canada as a staging area to provide a means of undetected travel to a target country; as an escape route or exodus point for returning to the USSR; to familiarize themselves with their legends by obtaining background knowledge to support their false identities; and for third-country 'meets' with 'illegal' support officers."

It also describes how several Canadian embassy employees in Moscow "fell victim to KGB entrapment" in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

One employee, a Canadian Forces non-commissioned officer working as a mechanic, "provided the KGB with a considerable dossier of information on Canadian and Allied personnel in Moscow."

He also provided information about the physical layout of the Canadian embassies in Moscow and Peking "and literally 'sold out' other Canadians," the report said.

"One of the Canadians introduced by the NCO to his KGB handlers in Moscow subsequently provided information on alleged Central Intelligence Agency activities in that city and in Cairo, Egypt, where he was cross-posted in January, 1973."

Young stabbing victim with 'treasure'

Lafleur scores with youngster

CALGARY (CP) — Cory Gurnsey couldn't believe his eyes.

The nine-year-old stabbing victim sat in his hospital bed staring at a Guy Lafleur hockey sweater and an autographed picture of the famous Montreal Canadiens right winger.

Lafleur sent the goodies after hearing that Cory's original Lafleur sweater was ruined when the boy was stabbed eight times on the way home from school last week. No arrests have been made.

Claude Mouton, public relations director for the Canadiens, said Lafleur will telephone Cory on Friday and do anything "he can to lift his spirits."

In addition to the replica sweater the Canadiens sent Cory, Lafleur will send his own sweater after the regular season, Mouton said.

Laura Gurnsey, the boy's mother, said Cory might be released from hospital this weekend.

He is still has nightmares and "cries whenever I have to leave the hospital."

"I just can't thank him (Lafleur) enough for this."

Adrift hunters rescued

CORAL HARBOUR, N. W. T. (CP) — Four Eskimo hunters who spent three days adrift on an ice flow in Hudson Bay were rescued Tuesday by a change in the wind.

A planned helicopter rescue was called off when a change in wind direction forced the ice flow back to shore and the men were able to walk off.

"We lucked out, put it that way," said one RCMP officer.

The four were hunting seal Saturday when the ice on which they were standing broke and they floated out to sea on a chunk about 1.6 kilometres wide and 10 kilometres long.

Searchers from their home settlement of Coral Harbour, on Southampton Island, N. W. T., set out in power toboggans Sunday, found broken ice where the tracks of the hunters ended and called RCMP in Rankin Inlet, N. W. T.

A plane chartered by RCMP found the hunters Monday, but the ice flow couldn't be safely approached by boat or plane so a helicopter was chartered from Thompson, Man., and a rescue attempt was planned for today.

The men were equipped with sleeping bags and cariboo skins to cope with temperatures that fell to -35 C.

'Crisis of faith' reported among China youth

PEKING (Reuter) — Many young Chinese are suffering from a "crisis of faith" in the system and no longer believe Marxist-Leninism is the answer to the country's problems, say recent articles in the official news media.

Over the last few months, authorities have felt it necessary to make a number of calls for a renewal of confidence, even in such basics as the leadership of the Communist party, especially among the young.

"Some people think that Marxist-Leninism is not effective and are no longer willing to learn it," complains the Shanghai newspaper Wen Hui Bao recently. "In schools, political theory classes are not popular, while political discussions in offices and factories are usually a waste of time."

The Workers' Daily, in an article published toward the end of last year, took the argument a step further:

"Some young comrades are at present suffering from a so-called 'crisis of faith.' What is a crisis of faith? It means that from the point of view of these young people, there doesn't seem to be anything at the moment that they can believe in.

"They don't believe in Marxist-Leninism, Mao Tsetung thought, the leadership of the Chinese Communist party, the positive qualities of socialism or the glorious future of communism."

After the upheavels and the purges of the last 30 years since the Communist victory in China, it is not surprising that many are beginning to have doubts about the very basis of the system.

"More and more people are losing interest in politics," one Chinese intellectual said. "The line has changed so often over the years, they don't know what is right and what is wrong anymore."

Disillusionment with politics in general is a problem. Ideology is becoming less and less effective as an incentive and authorities have to a large extent substituted bonuses and increased supplies of consumer goods in an effort to provide the workers with motivation.

"There is a fair amount of disillusionment, some directed at the system and some at the effects of the system such as unemployment, rising prices, the inability to decide one's own fate," one diplomat said.

As with so many things, former defence minister Lin Biao and the so-called Gang of Four radicals, who fell from power in 1971 and 1976 respectively, are blamed for the present crisis of faith.

The Wen hui Bao newspaper claims Lin and the radicals created an atmosphere during the Cultural Revolution of 1966-69 in which "the eagerness of the people to learn Chairman Mao's works reached the stage of fanaticism, while people's faith in theory reached the stage of superstition."

This atmosphere, based as it was on "false Marxist-Leninism," warped the political viewpoints of many people, the paper said.

"After the myth of modern superstition had been broken (by the downfall of the Gang of Four) those well-intentioned people who had been cheated, especially the young people, have become disappointed, bitter, uncertain of what to do . . .

"We must analyse the causes of the 'crisis of faith' and call on them to quickly end their bitterness and their uncertainty."

Some people, however, are not so sure that the cause of the crisis of faith is the "false Marxist-Leninism" promoted by the Gang of Four.

Before its former editor, Wei Jingsheng, was sentenced to 15 years in jail for counter-revolutionary agitation last October, the last issue of the unofficial magazine Exploration carried an article on the same subject.

It suggested that it is Marxism itself that is the cause of the crisis of faith.

"Just take a look at the reality of Chinese society as directed by Marxism and the 'happy lives' it has brought for the vast majority of young people and you should be able to understand how such a crisis could be created," the article's author, Lu Lin, wrote.

He also took issue with the assertion of the official media that only some young people are affected by the crisist some, why would it be called a crisis?" he reasoned.

Author finds a quiet spot

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A man who stole two cartons of cigarettes so he could find a quiet place to write a book found a sympathetic audience when he appeared in Kamloops provincial court.

After Judge Gordon Gilmour read the manuscript, Crown counsel Edward Ormheim decided to withdraw a charge of theft under $200 against Daniel Dube, 31, of no fixed address.

Dube first appeared in court Dec. 18, refused a Legal Aid lawyer, and pleaded not guilty. When Crown counsel opposed bail, Dube said he didn't mind staying in jail.

Before the trial started Tuesday, Gilmour was told that Dube had a document he wanted only the judge to see.

"Apparently you wrote a book while you were incarcerated," observed Gilmour after reading the document.

Dube said he stole the cigarettes because "I figured it (jail) was a good place to write a book."

Ormheim said he accepted Dube's reason for taking the cigarettes, and withdrew the charge.

"The book isn't all that bad," Gilmour said. "I commend you for your work."

Solar energy project set in remote site

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The mountain hamlet selected by a U.S.-Mexico joint project for this country's first solar energy community is so remote that planners describe it as "a place you can't even get to on horseback."

The village of Ajuchitlan, tucked away from the 20th century in mountains less than 160 kilometres south of this capital, will be a model for isolated villages to use solar energy to pump water and generate electricity.

"You get there first by car, then another four-wheeled vehicle, then on horseback and finally on foot up rocky cliffs," says Robert Wilcox, science attache at the U.S. embassy here.

"Electricity wouldn't reach there until the next century."

Ajuchitlan is so remote that families cannot afford delivery of kerosene to run a generator or burn lamps. Villagers cook with firewood but trees are getting scarce. Bedtime comes soon after sunset.

The plans for the village are being drafted at the U.S. department of energy while negotiators discuss the cost.

The joint project begins, literally, with getting there.

"Mexico is providing the road and bridge," Wilcox says "The U.S. will provide the design and the hardware."

A meeting is to be held among participants early this year to approve the design and cost. Solar installations for the village can be completed in less than 15 months after the agreement is signed.

Although there are several methods to take advantage of the sun's energy, Mexico selected the cheapest and least complex. The sun provides the power needed to drive pumps to supply water for homes and irrigation and to drive a generator for electricity.

A key element is water below ground.

"There are water deposits in the subsoil of northern desert areas at about 30 to 90 feet that can be pumped for use in homes, agriculture and cattle raising," says a study on the project.

"Use of that water will determine the development of tourism in Baja California, for example. Solar plants are vital to cattle raising. During the 1974 drought in northern Mexico, lack of water cost $10 million in lost cattle."

The sun's heat boils butane gas which drives a water pump, also driving a simple generator for electricity. One kilowatt of electric energy produced by this solar plant will cost $7,700 over 20 years, about the cost of operating a refrigerator. The same kilowatt produced by an internal combustion pump would cost $72,000.

Solar energy will provide the village with drinking and irrigation water and a waste disposal system.

Homes will have electric lights, perhaps even television.

Ripper 12 police 0, they taunt

By ED BLANCHE

LONDON (AP) — Every Saturday, the tough soccer fans of England's northern industrial cities taunt police patrolling big league games with the chant : "Ripper 12, Police 0."

The Yorkshire Ripper — has slashed 12 women to death in four years, attacked at least four others, and evaded the biggest and costliest murder dragnet in British police history.

He first struck more than four years ago — on Oct. 30, 1975. He butchered a prostitute named Wilma McCann, a 28-year-old divorced mother of four, in the red light Chapeltown district of the textile city of Leeds.

Since then he has struck again and again with no discernible motive or pattern beyond an apparent pathological hatred of prostitutes, even though three of his victims were respectable women.

He always leave a trademark — a special knife wound.

Police refuse to describe it for fear of similar killings.

Detectives in Yorkshire say they're stymied. In November, Chief Constable Ronald Gregory called in one of Scotland Yard's top sleuths, 51-year-old Cmdr. Jim Nevill, who led the Yard's anti-terrorist squad.

Nevill has a reputation for getting his men. He helped track down Britain's Great Train Robbers and smashed the Irish Republican Army's terrorist network in London several years ago.

Even so, Gregory stresses that the killer will be caught only through plodding, dogged detective work. "There's no Sherlock Holmes or Kojak who could give us instant success."

Detectives say that all they can do is wait until he strikes again and hope he makes a mistake that will break the case.

But if he doesn't, they fear it's possible he may never be caught despite clues like his blood group obtained through analyzing saliva on the stamp on a letter he sent detectives — his footprint and his voice on tape.

A detective who has seen some of the Ripper's victims says: "We're after an animal. But I bet he looks like you or me, an ordinary bloke. That's just one of our problems."

The killer takes his name from Jack the Ripper, who stalked the cobbled streets of London's Whitechapel district in 1888, slaying at least six prostitutes.

After the last known Ripper slaying Sept. 4, police started an unprecedented publicity campaign in an attempt to find clues to flush the killer out.

The core of the campaign is an edited version of a tape-recorded message the police are convinced came from the Ripper.

Detectives say the tape must be genuine because it contains unpublicized details of the slayings that only the killer would know.

His dull, monotone voice is broadcast several times a day in the hope someone will recognize it.

The Ripper tape has been played in discos, bars and working men's clubs all over the North.

Dr. Robert Shaw, a Leeds psychiatrist aiding police, says that what he calls the Ripper's psychopathic need for attention will force him to make a mistake one day.

"He's been lucky. He's got away with murder. But it isn't enough, because he wants attention. Look at the pattern. He commits murder and nothing happens.

"So he sends letters to the police. Nothing happens. He sends a tape. Still they don't get him.

"He's on an ego trip. He committed the last murder 500 yards from a police station. He think's he invincible, so he'll fail to learn by his mistakes."

Police have questioned 178,000 people, checked 172,000 vehicles, searched nearly 30,000 houses and taken statements from 22,500 people.

The strain and frustration is evident. Several detectives have been transferred off the investigation at their own request.

George Oldfield, West Yorkshire's assistant chief constable, who has sworn to get the Ripper, was ill recently with what colleagues say was exhaustion.

Oldfield says he'll be back on the Ripper's trail.

"It's a personal war between George and the Ripper now," one Yorkshire detective says.

Oily riches are shared by all

By ELIAS ANTAR

SHARJAH, U.A.E. (AP) — Take $14 billion in oil revenue, spread it among the 890,000 inhabitants of the United Arab Emirates and you get $15,750 a year for every man, woman and child.

It is the highest per capita income in the world.

In this category, the fortunate people of the United Arab Emirates — a loose federation of seven emirates on the southern shore of the Persian Gulf — regularly outdistance those of North America, Switzerland and Sweden.

The spread of wealth in the U.A.E is lopsided, with far more going to ruling sheiks and merchant families than to the Indians and Pakistanis who compose the bulk of the work force. But, in the view of diplomats and Western experts, there is more than enough for everyone.

There is no income tax. The government provides free education and health care. Citizens who are not satisfied with local medical treatment may go abroad, also at government expense. Local telephone calls are free.

"Let's face it, the government takes good care of its own," said one diplomatic source, who asked not to be identified. "As a group, native citizens are pampered."

There are only about 200,000 native citizens, and they consider manual labor beneath them. Hence construction workers are Egyptian, streetsweepers are Indian and government clerks are Palestinians or Pakistanis. But the top posts in government, trading and banking a4e held by locals.

These elite think nothing of living in houses that can cost up to $250,000 for a three-bedroom villa with servant quarters. The latest trend is to import Filipinos "because they are very polite around the house," as one resident put it.

In Sharjah, perhaps the flashiest of the seven emirates, the Marbella Club of Spain built 50 villas on a lagoon surrounded by 28,000 airfreighted trees — for tourists.

But who needs tourists when so much money is already at home? The villas were snapped up by local merchants as permanent homes even before they were finished.

The ruler of Sharjah, Sheik Sultan Bin Mohammed El Qasimi, decided the old bazaar was tacky, even though it was built of coral. It was razed and replaced with a $170-million complex vaguely resembling a Gothic cathedral.

Now his subjects can shop in air-conditioned comfort for gold or silver jewelry, duty-free cameras, Persian carpets — even a medieval suit of armor imported, said the salesman, from Bombay.

Ras al-Khaima, Ajman, Umm al-Qaiwain and Fujaira are the poorer relations in the emirates. Their people sometimes look longingly at their brethren in Dubai, Abu Dhabi and Sharjah, which have most of the money, and consume it conspicuously. Items:

— In a street in Abu Dhabi, the driver's seat of a Mercedes limousine is covered with an ostrich-feather cape.

— In a leading Dubai hotel, French mannequins model a ready-to-wear collection from Europe and the United States.

— The owner of another hotel in Dubai decided he needed a typical English pub, so he imported one from England, complete with bar and blackened roof beams — made of plastic. The Red Lion is packed every night and no wonder, since a bottle of Scotch costs only $5.

— Pride of place in a Chrysler showroom is held by a shining white $45,000 custom-built limousine with six doors. Ordered by anyone in particular? "No," said the Indian salesman. "We just decided to get it. Someone will buy it eventually."

CP denies rail blame

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — CP Rail Ltd. has disclaimed all responsibility for the Nov. 10 train derailment that caused the evacuation of about 225,000 Mississauga residents.

In a written brief submitted on the first day of the Mississauga Railway Accident Inquiry, CP Rail said:

"According to the information now in the possession of CP Rail, this accident happened without fault on the part of CP Rail or anyone in its employ, whether in the operation of Train 54 on Nov. 10, 1979, the inspection or maintenance of that train, the inspection or maintenance of the track or otherwise in the operation of the railway or at all.

Explosives cache laid to IRA

DUNDALK, Ireland (AP) — Police seized nearly a ton of guerrilla explosives and bombs from an abandoned house near this Irish republic town close to the border with Northern Ireland. A police spokesman said the haul included 700 pounds of explosives, several mortars, 30 Soviet-made rockets and 10 primed 100-pound bombs in milk churns, frequently used to ambush British Army patrols along the border.

PLANNING WORKSHOP
HIGHLAND LAND DISTRICT
AT Belmont-Fisher High School
Lunch Room
January 26, 1980
9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

THE PLANNING PROCESS

As a result of the controversy over the use of land in the Highlands, the Planning Department was instructed by the Capital Regional Board to prepare a secondary plan for the area. It was anticipated that land use problems related to the maintenance and the development of the Highlands would be sorted out and identified through the plan making process. Ultimately, the plan would provide guidelines for the management of the area in terms of environmental protection, land development, regional park designations traffic circulation and services.

To ensure that the views of the residents are fairly represented in the plan, the Planning Department has organized a series of public participation programmes including: establishment of the steering committee for Highlands planning, public workshop and public meetings.

THE STEERING COMMITTEE

A steering committee for Highlands planning was organized in August 1979 by the Planning Department. The Committee consisted of the representatives from the East Highland community Association and the Highland District Community Association. The committee completed its service by clarifying planning issues in order to assist the participants at the January public workshop. These issues will be circulated at the workshop.

PUBLIC WORKSHOP

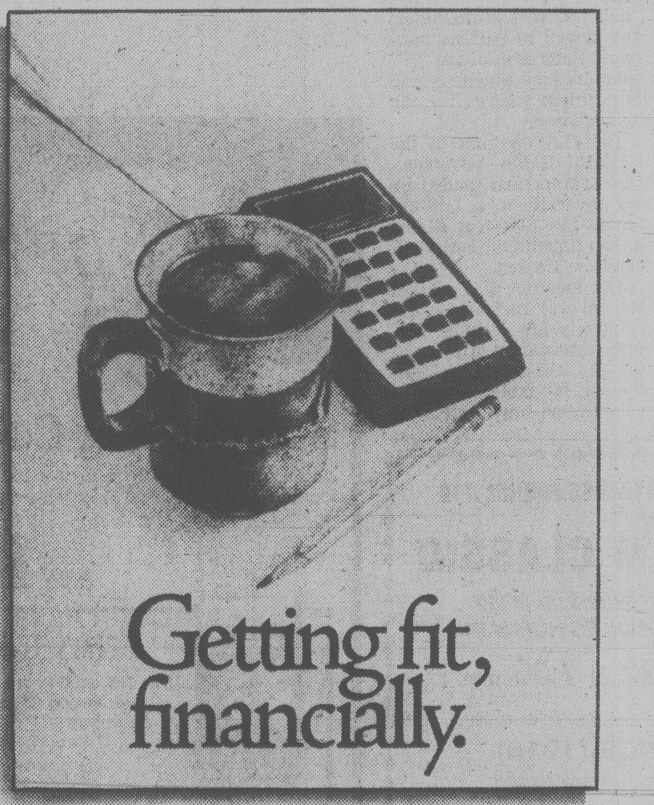
As indicated, a public workshop has been organized for the planning of the Highlands on January 26th. The participants at the workshop will be requested to discuss and to define planning issues for the area in terms of environment, development, parks and recreation, circulation and services.

PLAN ALTERNATIVES

Once the planning issues are clarified, it will be possible for the Planning Department to outline plan alternatives for the area. Sometime in February 1980, the public will again be invited to review the plan alternatives before the secondary plan is drafted.

The Capital Regional District Planning Department may be contacted for further information at 524 Yates Street, Victoria, B.C. TELEPHONE: 388-4421

How to get your financial life in shape.



Getting fit, financially.

DRAWINGS BY ALVEN RACICOT

The joys of financial fitness can be every bit as rewarding as the joys of physical fitness.

Security, peace of mind, pleasure and pride in ownership, and the knowledge that you can provide for those who need you.

The decision to get your financial life in shape can be prompted by many different things. A sudden financial crisis, which confronts you with the inadequacy of your protection against such crises. It may, on the other hand, be only a vague feeling that you need to get things under control.

For many of us, the need for financial fitness is brought on by a change in lifestyle. A change in marital status, the birth of a child, property ownership, or a promotion and suddenly you are confronted with responsibilities that you must deal with.

The decision-making process is just one area of our free booklet on financial planning. It also helps you plan for your goals and has helpful suggestions on maintaining control of your financial situation.

Sun Life is concerned with the quality of life, financial and physical. If you have concerns in the areas of protection for mortgage, business, family income, or estate; savings for children's education, or retirement income; tax shelters and income averaging; or employee benefits, see us. Our new, easy to understand policy form, and competitive rates reflect our attitude of making your financial life easy to get in shape.

Radio telescope sprouting

MAGDALENA, N.M. (UPI) — The world's largest radio telescope system, sprouting like a field of giant mushrooms on a high remote plain, is still a year away from dedication but already is giving astronomers hints about the nature of the universe.

The "Very Large Array" is radio astronomy's solution to the problem of improving the resolution and sensitivity of detectors of faint cosmic radio signals without building an impractically huge single antenna.

Optical telescopes can achieve a resolution comparable to seeing a nickel 20 miles away with a lens 200 inches in diameter. A radio antenna would have to be thousands of times that big to obtain the same clarity because of differences in the frequency and wavelength of light and radio signals.

The effect of an immense single receiver is simulated by the VLA arrangement, in which 27 antennas are placed in a Y-shaped pattern along three equiangular arms 11.8-13 miles long.

While an object is being tracked, the VLA computer compares the signal received by one antenna with that detected by other antennas. A total of 351 checks are made for each signal. The rotation of the Earth allows an object to be fully "mapped" during an eight-hour period.

"If we track for eight hours, we have the same resolution as we would with a single telescope 26 miles in diameter," said VLA spokesman Jonathan Spargo. "It is at least as accurate as the best optical telescope."

Although the VLA will not be dedicated officially until late 1980 or early 1981, its antennas have been used to gather information since the first one was turned on in mid-1976.

Earlier this year, scientists from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology using VLA data announced the possible discovery of the first double quasar — mysterious celestial objects that seem to be emitting more energy than possible for their apparent size and distance.

The MIT group said studies of the interactions between the two apparent objects could provide more information about quasars, which in turn could be helpful in understanding the formation of the universe.

Besides tuning in on quasars, considered among the most remote objects in space, the VLA has been used to investigate much closer objects in the solar system and the galaxy in which it is located, the Milky Way.

The array has been used to study the galactic nucleus, supernovae, dust and gas clouds and black holes — objects with such powerful gravity that nothing escapes, light.

The "Y" of the array is defined by railroad tracks, along which the 212-ton, 94-feet-tall antennas, each topped with a receiving "dish" 82 feet in diameter, are moved to various positions. Each arm of the "Y" contains nine antennas and 24 positions where they can be anchored.

The VLA, operated by the National Radio Astronomy Observatory and funded by the government, is laid out across the 7,000-foot Plains of San Agustin in southwestern New Mexico.

The location was chosen for several reasons — the relatively low latitude permits observation of most of the sky, the terrain is flat, the soil is stable enough to support the huge antennas, the remoteness diminishes manmade interference with radio reception and the high altitude eliminates about 25 percent of the atmospheric water vapor, which causes such effects as the "twinkling" of stars.

A struggle for Godunov

By DIANNE COPELON

BERLIN (AP) — Ballet star Alexander Godunov says the 4½ months since he defected from the Soviet Union have proven such a strain he has had to struggle day by day "just trying to live."

A series of cancellations that delayed his debut with the strike-bound American Ballet Theatre in New York City were "hard on the nerves," the tall, blond dancer said in an interview.

Godunov spoke briefly following one of four performances scheduled in West Berlin's Deutsche Oper, about five kilometres miles from the Berlin Wall.

The performances, which began Monday night, are his first since his celebrated "leap to the West" last August while on a tour of the United States with the Bolshoi Ballet.

Godunov said he remains in contact with his wife, ballerina Ludmilla Vlasilova, 36, who refused to remain with him in the United States. She returned to Moscow aboard a Soviet airliner last Aug. 28 after American officials held the plane for three days at New York's Kennedy airport.

U.S. officials allowed the plane to leave after she told them personally that she was returning voluntarily.

"I don't want to talk about politics, about my wife," said Godunov. "Of course, I miss her very much, but we speak on the phone regularly even though I know everybody is listening to our conversation. But for me, it's enough to hear her voice."

The 30-year-old artist with the shoulder-length hair drew a 15-minute ovation from the Berlin audience following his debut in the male lead of Giselle.

But after the performance, Godunov told an interviewer he had been so frustrated and downcast during the last few months that "I haven't even been in training all the time."

Didn't the rousing applause boost his spirits?

"First, a glass of champagne for everyone," he said, adding after a pause: "It's difficult to say. I must rest and think about my performance. But it was good to be dancing again."

Godunov, who said he defected last Aug. 23 for artistic rather than political reasons, said his dream in life is to dance "everywhere."

"It's impossible to talk about ideals," he added. "Never it comes, ideals, never it comes. Everybody wants ideals, but it never comes. We must see real life."

The Russian will repeat Giselle here Jan. 19 and dance in Swan Lake on Feb. 2 and 4.

Godunov said he has had offers from other Western companies but still hopes to perform with the American Ballet Theatre.

"They're on strike now," he added. "And so I don't dance. For many days."

Opening lead — king of clubs.

There is a difference of opinion about what constitutes a percentage play, but often the question is more a matter of semantics than arithmetic.

Assume you're in four spades and West leads the king of clubs. You ruff and play a spade to the queen, losing to East's ace. Back comes a club, which you ruff again. You lead a heart to the jack, return a spade on which East plays the nine, and now face a crucial decision. Do you play the ten or the king?

The so-called percentage play is the king — because mathematically East will be dealt the A-9 more often than the A-J-9. But the proper play — considering the hand as a whole, rather than only the spade suit — is the ten. There is the best of reasons for playing the ten, namely, that you guarantee the contract if you finesse and run the risk of going down if you don't.

Note that in the actual hand, when you finesse, the ten wins and you easily make the contract by scoring five spades, four hearts and a diamond. But note also that if the ten loses to the jack you are equally on firm ground. In that case, your only losers would be two spades and a diamond — since you can discard three diamonds from dummy on the A-K-Q of hearts and thus restrict yourself to one diamond loser.

In the actual hand, if you play the king of spades instead of the ten, you go down against proper defense. East wins your diamond lead to the queen, cashes the jack of spades, returns the ten of diamonds, and in that way finishes you off. The so-called percentage play would fail.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

We have 2588 for the game today. Two 8's, one 5 and one 2. Using all four each time, but no other digits at all, you form expressions for the consecutive numbers from one up.

Any arithmetical signs may be used, but no summation or factorial symbols. Don't forget decimals, regular and repeater, also powers and roots. For example, 82-8+5 is a solution for 79.

The limit without a break in continuity seems to be 96, with 94 as a possible challenge. I shall be glad to check solutions.

Don't be stone cold

By TIMOTHY AEPPEL
Christian Science Monitor

BURNHAM, Maine — Sleep with a stone in your bed?

It may not be as ridiculous as it sounds. As oil-pinched Americans seek cheaper ways to stay warm, the bed warmer may help.

Before the days of central heat and electric blankets, it was common practice to preheat the bed by inserting a hot brick wrapped in flannel, cloth or newspaper or a covered pan containing hot coals. Later came the hot-water bottle, which eliminated stubbed toes and scorched sheets.

But throughout the age of the chilly bedchamber, the soapstone bed warmer offered the ultimate in toasty warmth.

Soapstone is a magnesium silicate that first was used by the Egyptians and later by the Eskimos for carving. American colonialists found the smooth, slate-gray stone perfect for chasing the chill from between the sheets--a discovery all but lost in the last few decades. "But people are rediscovering soapstone, and I can't keep up with all of the inquiries," said Jeff Barnes, who recently began crafting soapstone bed warmers in the circa 1920 blacksmith shop on his farm here.

The secret to soapstone's warm reputation, according to Harvard Mineralogical Museum curator Carl Francis, is its "poor electron conducting capabilities." This means the stone absorbs energy (heat) very slowly and releases it slowly. The result is warm feet many hours after water bottles or bricks are cold.

Barnes, an ironworker by trade, has been using a soapstone bed warmer since finding one stowed away in his uninsulated Maine house five yars ago. He hopes to start a home industry in soapstone crafting. "But we're barely breaking even now, and we won't make anything unless it really catches on."

Business prospects seem bright. "Stove stores all over Maine are interested in carrying the bed warmers," said Barnes, holding out an example of the smooth bvass-handled product. But for now, he plans to stay independent, selling the stone from his Horseback Road farmhouse and processing mail orders.

Barnes has made the bed warmers a family affair by enlisting the help of his wife Diana, who handcrafts the optional insulated bags offered with the stones. The bags are covered with upholstery material and lined with scorch cloth.

The Barneses also use their soapstone to beat the August heat. "We just set the soapstone in the refrigerator during dinner, and by the time we're ready for bed, it's all set to go," said Barnes. "It's a perfect bed cooler."

Barnes's interest in energy-efficient lifestyles stems from his training in ironwork. Although he started crafting soapstone three years ago, he since has had to supplement his income by welding steel furances for a nearby company.

Besides the bed warmers, Barnes crafts soapstone griddles, which he calls "the original Teflon and the Crockpot of the Indians." The 10-by-16-inch slices of stone have beveled grooves to keep pancake batter and cooking oil from running over. "This is especially important in old farmhouses where the floors — and the stove — are uneven," he said.

He also has plans to produce a soapstone stove in his shop.

"I call it the Tut Stove, because it has the dimensions of a pyramid with a firebox below," said Barnes. The Tut is an original design that Barnes developed through his work at the furnace company and his own study. The pyramid shape increases the number of surfaces and maximizes surface area. This results in "more heat being radiated out in more directions."

The final touch in all of Barnes's soapstone work is the polishing and oiling of the stone. Foot warmers are coated with salad-bowl finish, which darkens the stone and brings out grain patterns. It also helps prevent chips and scratches in the soft stone. The griddles are finished with sesame-seed oil.

Japan eyes sails on oil tankers

TOKYO (AP) — In the endless search for new ways to conserve oil, a Japanese shipbuilding company predicts that it will produce the world's first ocean-going tanker equipped with both sails and engines.

In feasibility studies done so far, Nippon Kokean K.K. has gone to sea with a 77-ton test ship, equipped with three kinds of sails.

"Our estimate now is that if we got fair winds of up to 32 miles an hour from a 90-degree heading, we could cut the engines and stil keep a 20,000-ton ship moving at 15 knots," says Kazuyuki Shimizu, the shipbuilder's chief naval architect.

This would be the equivalent of 7,480 horsepower on a conventional ship, he says.

The basic idea is to use sails to augment normal power and save about 10 per cent of the fuel now consumed by ocean-going cargo ships, says Shimizu.

As oil prices go up, auxilary sails will become increasingly valuable and economically feasible when fuel oil costs more than $200 a ton, he predicts.

The sails themselves would not be the old clipper-ship variety but giant rectangular sails of plastic, folded against iron masts when not in use.

Burglars showed scant respect for Chicago's new police chief. Twenty-four hours after Richard Brzeczek was appointed to lead the 12,000-strong police force, thieves broke into his home and stole about $300 worth of jewelry. When Brzeczek returned from an outing with his wife and four children to find his home robbed, he said he did what any ordinary citizen would do in the circumstances. He called the police.

Collins

Michael Collins, the astronaut who got so near and yet so far from the Moon in 1969, has resigned as the Smithsonian Institution's second-in-command to take a job in the aerospace industry. Collins, who was the command-module pilot on Apollo 11, man's first moon-landing mission, remained in lunar orbit while Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin, his crew mates, descended to the Moon's surface. The 49-year-old Collins is joining the Vought Corp. as vice president for field operations in Washington.

Drew Terry is downright rhapsodic about the hot tub in his Norfolk, Va., back yard — says, "I love to sit in my tub and look up at the moon and stars." The neighbor who peeked over Terry's 8-foot fence from a third-floor window was less poetic. He saw "a naked woman," and called the cops. Terry and friends, busted in their nudity by the vice squad, were fined $50 each — Terry for keeping, and his friends for frequenting, "a bawdy house." Says Terry, "it's absurd."

Jimmy Carter wrote a book called Why Not The Best? Apparently his mother, Miss Lillian, asks the same question. In the Book of Lists No. 2, Mrs. Carter rates her son as sixth best in a list of seven U.S. presidents — giving No. 1 to Abraham Lincoln. Next came Woodrow Wilson, Harry Truman, Theodore Roosevelt and John Kennedy. She put George Washington in number seven spot.

Harry Simons ought to know about war. He's fought in three of them — the Spanish American and the First and Second World Wars, and he says he expects to live to see the Third World War.Says Simons, who's just celebrated his 101st birthday in Cadillac, Mich. "I'll tell you one thing for sure. They call me this time, I'm going to tell them I'm too busy hunting and fishing."

Dear Abby:

My name is Adam and I am 11. My father went out of town for a few days and left his big car in our garage. Neil, a kid my age, came over and said he knew how to drive, so I got the keys and told he could drive forward and backwards in our driveway. Well, while Neil was backing up, he saw my Mom drive up behind him in her little car. He panicked and rammed Mom's car, smashing the whole front end, but good. Mom wasn't hurt, but her car was a mess.

I admit it was my fault for letting Neil drive, but he was the one who wrecked Mom's car, and all the blame was placed on me. Mom is making me pay for the damage by taking it out of my allowance. It will take me forever to pay it off. I am also grounded for a month with no TV privileges.

Mom says I can't be trusted and she has lot all confidence in me. Please tell me how I can get my Mom to trust me again? I told her I learned my lesson, but she doesn't believe me.

Adam

Dear Adam:

Start to build your mother's confidence in you by being 100 per cent truthful and responsible. Repeated good behavior will establish you as a trustworthy person. Words mean nothing. Performance means everything.

Dear Abby:

Is it ever proper to ask someone why they didn't invite you to their party?

I wouldn't do it to put someone on the spot. I really want to know if maybe I did (or said) something to offend that person. And there is always a chance that my invitation got lost in the mails. Sign me . . .

Dear Hurt:

The word from here is, don't ask.

Dear Abby:

The letter from Meg in St. Paul concerning baggage lost in airports because it isn't tagged with the name and address of the owner prompts this letter.

I, too, work for an airline. In the last year I have twice had to search the length of the Denver airport for lost luggage containing a passenger's heart medicine!

Abby, please tell your readers never to pack medication, passports, or anything else of importance (or value) in a piece of luggage to be shipped through. Carry them on your person!

This is especially wise during the winter, when snowstorms may cause flight delays and cancellations that might separate you from your luggage for a while.

Take a tip from an airline employee. Most of us carry a toilet kit, a change of underwear and other necessities in our carry-on luggage in case we get stranded overnight, because we often are.

Mousse made in easy time

By PIERRE FRANEY

Like omelets, souffles and crepes, a mousse of one sort or another — sweet or savory — seems to intrigue the average North American cook more than any other dish in the French repertory. Whether chocolate or fish, it exerts an enormous appeal to the taste. The name itself means foam, which has to do with the texture of a well-made mousse.

This is not the first time I have noted that the food processor is the greatest kitchen invention of this generation. And when it comes to the preparation of a mousse, it is the ultimate asset. Whenever I make a mousse — and it is often, for I share the public enthusiasm — I am reminded that, with the processor I accomplish in seconds what once required hours of tedious hand work — grinding and pounding fish or chicken or whatever, to produce a fine enough texture. Generally speaking, it was necessary years ago to put the basic mixture through a fine sieve and to place it in a basin of ice to get the proper consistency.

One of the best and quickest mousses I have made recently is of chicken. The procedure is to puree the skinless, boneless breast of chicken in the processor along with seasonings, an egg yolk and heavy cream. This is an elegant dish and one that you will want to serve on special occasions. The initial preparation takes 15 minutes or less, the cooking time another 15 minutes.

The mousse requires a sauce, and I would propose a simple and easily made mushroom sauce with a little tomato added for flavor and color and a touch of tarragon for subtlety. The dish is best served with plainly cooked rice with a bit of butter stirred in.

Mousse variations are many — but there's always the foam

MOUSSE DE VOLAILLE
(Chicken Mousse)

2 whole skinless, boneless chicken breasts
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
⅛ teaspoon nutmeg
Pinch of cayenne pepper
1 egg yolk
1¼ cups heavy cream
Mushroom sauce (see recipe).

Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.

2. Pick over the breasts and cut off any membranes or tendons. Cut the chicken into two-inch cubes.

3. Put the chicken into the container of a food processor and add salt, pepper, nutmeg, cayenne pepper and the egg yolk.

4. Start processing until the flesh is coarse-fine.

5. Continue processing while adding the cream.

6. Butter the insides of four small ramekins or baking dishes. Individual Chinese rice or soup bowls are ideal for this. The volume of each portion is about half a cup. Spoon equal portions of the mixture into the ramekins.

7. Cut out four pieces of wax paper to fit the tops of each mousse.

8. Set the ramekins in a heatproof basin of hot water. Set the basin on the top of the stove. Bring the water to a boil and place the ramekins and the water bath in the oven. Bake 15 minutes. Serve with mushroom sauce (see recipe).

Yield: 4 servings.

SAUCE
AUX CHAMPIGNONS
(Mushroom Sauce)

¼ pound fresh mushrooms
3 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons finely chopped shallots
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
½ cup dry white wine
½ cup chopped canned tomatoes
¾ cup fresh or canned chicken broth
¼ teaspoon dried tarragon
½ teaspoon arrowroot or cornstarch
1 tablespoon water.

1. Slice the mushrooms as thinly as possible. There should be about one and one-quarter cups.

2. Heat one tablespoon of the futter in a saucepan and add the shallots, salt and pepper. Add the mushrooms and cook, stirring often, until they wilt and give up their liquid. Cook until the liquid evaporates. Add the wine and cook until most of the wine evaporates. Add the tomatoes, broth and tarragon and cook about five minutes.

3. Blend the arrowroot and water and stir it into the sauce. Simmer about 10 minutes.

4. Swirl in the remaining butter and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

Today's chef shies from copper

the 60-minute gourmet

Warnings about cooking in unlined copper have been sounded for centuries. An especially urgent one came in 1785 from Dr. Thomas Percival of Manchester, who asserted before the Royal College of Physicians in London that the careless use of copper utensils "puts us in daily hazard, not only of the loss of health but even of life itself."

Modern cooks tend to look anxiously for any signs of wear in the protective tin that generally lines a copper pot. I, for one, have always assumed, relying on the teachings of tradition, that the ingestion of food cooked in unlined copper would result in some serious consequence. At the same time, it never bothered me that candy was commonly cooked in unlined copper or that egg whites were beaten in it. Recently, in a number of contexts, this contradiction has been brought to my attention.

One of the few known experts on copper toxicity is Dr. I. Herbert Scheinberg, a professor of medicine at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine, who in a discussion the other day was able to dispel some of the confusion about the metal. He said that copper ingested in minute amounts is harmless and in fact is essential to life. Excess copper is naturally voided by the body, except by the rare victims of a genetic disorder known as Wilson's disease. It becomes toxic only under certain conditions — when so much copper is leached out of a utensil and into food that it becomes an irritant — and even then the consequences are minor. The symptoms are usually those associated with an upset stomach.

A classic case in the professional literature deals with a group of nurses who mixed whisky sours in a plated copper cocktail shaker whose plating was worn. Within 10 to 90 minutes afterward they were sickened. The culprit was the citric acid in the drink. Acid tends to eat away at the metal and draw it into the food. The nurses had taken in about twice as much copper as is normally ingested from such foods as oysters, liver or mushrooms.

Angina drug can work for migraines

By DR. L. L. COLEMAN

A drug, propranolol, known as "Inderal," is widely prescribed for the relief of the pain of angina pectoris, for the treatment of high blood pressure and for the control of heart irregularity.

During the course of its wide use, an interesting observation was made that the drug has value in the treatment and control of some cases of migraine. Although the exact mechanism of action of the drug is not entirely clear, research workers believe that it is a significant contribution to migraine sufferers.

It is well established that, along with migraine headache, there is dilation and narrowing of blood vessels to the brain. It seems that propranolol can modify this process and thus reduce the severity of some types of migraine.

Patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) are frequently unable to carry on normal activity. Emphysema, chronic bronchitis and bronchiectasis are the major reasons for COPD. There are now on the market some excellent compact air generators that can supply oxygen-enriched air to patients with these diseases.

One such compact and economical unit was recently brought to my attention in the journal, Geriatrics. They said that the unit is light and unobtrusive and moves on casters for greater mobility. Geriatrics says that additional information can be obtained from the John Bunn Company, in Tonawanda, N.Y.

A developing vaccination program for the elderly and for high-risk patients suggests that the new vaccine against pneumonia has great promise. Almost 14,000 people who were vaccinated in 1978 gave definite evidence that the vaccine was effective in reducing the severity and even the mortality normally associated with pneumococcal pneumonia.

Aside from the slight soreness at the site of injection, there were very few fever reactions or any other adverse effects.

This major preliminary study promises great hope. For without it, elderly patients, bedridden patients, undernourished people and those who are generally devitalized might succumb to the impact of pneumonia.

The initial studies suggest that the vaccine should not be administered to pregnant women and to children who ar less than 2 years old. It is also to be avoided among those people who have any active respiratory or other infections.

Casserole is the star of January

Casseroles star on my table in January. They are a welcome change from the robust roasts, basted birds and glazed hams of the holiday season.

Citrus fruits from the South — oranges and lemons — play a pretty important role in many of my creative combinations. Sometimes they are obvious, other times they are the secret ingredients that make the difference.

The tang of citrus perks up dishes which otherwise might be too bland. Lemon juice seems to bring out the natural distinct flavor of other foods. We take it for granted with fish. Squeeze a drop or two into a mixture like the following carrot and meatball casserole for an exciting touch.

Chicken, sweet potatoes and orange juice — what a trio! A molded Waldorf salad accentuated with lemon will go with the casserole for an applause winning meal.

Sweet Potato Chicken Casserole with Molded Waldorf Salad

CARROTS AND MEATBALLS in casserole

1½ pounds ground lean meat (meat loaf mixture or half pork and half beef)
1 small onion, finely chopped

NAVY BEANS are the small, oval-shaped, white beans that are the main ingredient for preparing a good pot of old-fashioned baked beans. Always bake beans slowly to make them tender and moist — about six to seven hours at 120 degrees C. Leftovers can be frozen up to six months.

Humble, hearty — that's a bean

Be it ever so humble, there is nothing like a bean. It's economical, nutritious and can be kept on the kitchen shelf at least a year and still be just as good.

Navy beans are the small, oval-shaped, white beans. They hold their shape even when cooked tender and are the main ingredient for preparing a good pot of old-fashioned baked beans.

Soak the beans overnight or quick soak them by slowly bringing to a boil, boil gently for 2 min, remove from heat and let stand 1 hr. The beans are now ready for the bean pot.

Always bake beans slowly to make them tender and moist — about 6 to 7 hrs at 120°C. Leftovers can be frozen for up to 6 months. This recipe for "Baked Beans — Quebec Style" was developed by the food consultants of the Food Advisory Division, Agriculture Canada.

BAKED BEANS
QUEBEC STYLE

500 mL white navy beans
1.5 L water
5 mL salt
250 mL chopped onion
250 g salt pork
50 mL brown sugar
125 mL molasses
5 mL dry mustard
1 mL pepper
1 mL salt

Wash beans and soak in water overninght. Add 5 mL salt, cover and bring to boil. Cook until beans are tender (about 45 min.). Drain; reserve liquid. Pour half the beans into bean pot or deep baking dish and sprinkle with onion. Score rind of pork, place on beans and add remaining beans. Combine remaining ingredients with 500 mL bean liquid and pour over beans. Cover and bake 6 to 7 h at 120°C. If necessary add more bean liquid. Uncover for last hour. 6 servings.

questions & answers

Q. I have often made paella in my own home. A friend of mine tells me that on a recent visit to Puerto Rico she ordered something called a paellita in a local restaurant. Is it the same thing?

A. A paellita is simply a modified version of a paella. A traditional paella, as you know, is an elaborate affair containing, among other things, such foods as chicken, lobster, clams, mussels, shrimp, sausages, pork and so on. A paellita, as I have had it in the home of Puerto Rican friends, is tailored to contain, for example, only chicken and shrimp. In principal, the technique for making both dishes is the same.

Q. A friend of mine recently used the word "gastronomade." I can't find it in my dictionary and wonder if such a word exists.

A. If I am not mistaken, the word was coined by the man considered in France to be the foremost epicure of his generation, Curnonsky. Curnonsky, who died several decades ago, was the pseudonym of Maurice-Edmond Sailland. He was dubbed the prince elu des gastronomes or the elected prince of gastronomes. Gastronomade was a blend of gastronome and nomade. Curnonsky defined a gastronomade as "one who visits a country in search of good hotels, good restaurants and good inns."

Q. What is the name of a tiny man with a hearty appetite?

A. A gastro-gnome.

Q. I recently ran across the word "basmati" in a book on India. Is it a special dish?

A. Basmati is a form of rice that is much prized in India. According to my friend, Madhur Jaffrey, author of "An Invitation to Indian Cooking" (Alfred A. Knopf, 1973), basmati grows in the foothills of the Himalayas.

"It has a narrow, long grain and a very special flavor and smell," she says. "The best basmati is aged before it is cooked — and it is cooked only by the rich because it is also very expensive." Because of foreign exchanges, she adds, it is often easier to buy basmati in New York than in New Delhi.

Q. I recently read an account of a meal at which gallimaufry was served. Can you tell me what it is?

A. Depending on the work, I cannot tell you whether the author was serious or not. In English the word generally means a hodgepodge. Originally it came from the French and is spelled galimafree, which meant a ragout or stew of one meat or another, generally chicken.

Supposedly it originated in medieval times, and consisted of roasting a chicken, frying it and then cooking it hn a sauce made of wine, sour, ganger, salt and rd. For obvious reasons, it is not a dish you're apt to find on any of today's menus.

Q. I seem to recall reading about a dish that was made from the fillet of chickens. Is it possible? I presume that the fillet would mean the breast. Will you enlighten me?

A. It is possible, but such a dish is expensive and rare. The whole breast of a chicken is called, in French, the supreme. If you remove the entire breast of a chicken, you will note a long strip of meat attached to the main part of the breast meat. That is the fillet, also called the mignon filet.

I have only once been served a dish made with the fillets. That was in the home of a friend, Marcel Gosselin, who in those days was the proprietor of the now defunct L'Armorique Restaurant in New York. He prepared the fillets in a rich cream sauce, and it was one of the great dishes of my time. He had, he told me, accumulated the fillets over a period of months and had kept them frozen for a special occasion.

Take two tablespoons full twice a day and follow the Naran plan.

If your first purchase does not show you the simple, easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't seem to disappear almost like magic from neck, chin, arms, bust, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow the easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears—how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

Serving sentiment

By MIKE McGRADY

After you've been cooking for a while, some dishes will acquire a definite sentimental value. It might be the first dinner that comes out perfectly. Or perhaps it will be a meal asssociated with a highly charged emotional event — a reunion of old friends, a family celebration, the first night your wife brings the boss home for dinner.

For me, this dish — an unlikely combination of lamb shanks, sweet potatoes and green beans — has the strongest sentimental tug of them all. Possibly because it's directly associated with one important aspect of the early marriage years: survival.

During those first years, when babies were arriving as rapidly as money was disappearing, there was one prime consideration when shopping for food: How much does it cost? If mankind had not invented macaroni, it is possible that this branch of the McGrady family would have been staryed out. A big day was hamburger; the biggest day of all, an invitation to eat out.

I can remember window-shopping at butcher shops the way others might window-shop at jewelry stores. One day while window-shopping, I came upon a sign that said, "Lamb Shanks." The other sign was a price tag and it said, "37 cents a pound." Surely that was a typographical error. But no, 37 cents was the correct price. It would be possible to buy almost three pounds of meat without breaking into a second dollar bill.

Buying a new cut of meat — whether it be shank of lamb or tongue of lark — always raises a question: What's the best way to cook it? Fortunately, at 37 cents a pound, there was room for experimentation that year in the field of lamb shanks. Which is why I can guarantee that this recipe is one of the best things you can do with a lamb shank.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: garlic, lemons, olive oil, vegetable oil, sugar, salt, pepper, flour, paprika, vanilla extract.

The Shopping List: Three and a half pounds of lamb shanks; four large sweet potatoes; four large ripe tomatoes; four ripe pears; one pound of broad Italian green beans, either fresh or frozen; fresh basil (enough for two cups of leaves); one-half cup grated parmesan cheese; one-third cup of pine nuts or shelled walnuts.

Prepare in Advance: the pesto sauce for the tomatoes. Pesto is a basil sauce that goes well with many dishes. It adds a unique flavor to buttered noodles; it's just fine with string beans; it is often added to soups and salad dressings.

However, to use pesto to best advantage, serve it with siced tomatoes. The fact that basil and tomatoes ripen simultaneously is one of nature's happy accidents. Incidentally, don't be alarmed if you have left-over sauce. Pesto keeps well and can be frozen with no great loss of flavor.

You'll be using the blender for this one. Rinse and pat dry the basil leaves, two loosely packed cups. Add a half cup of olive oil. Three cloves of chopped garlic. A dash of salt and pepper. A half-cup of grated parmesan cheese. A generous handful of either pine nuts or shelled walnuts. Blended all this into a thick sauce and set aside.

Also Prepare in Advance: the dessert. Peel the pears and cut them into halves. Mix a cup of water with a half cup of sugar and boil. Add a capful of vanilla extract. Poach the pears over a medium-low heat, stirring them once or twice, and when they are soft, set them aside to cool.

4:45 p.m.: Preheat oven to 350 degrees. If green beans are frozen, take them out of the freezer to thaw.

Then, using a sharp knife, trim all excess fat away from the lamb shanks. Mix a handful of flour with a large pinch of paprika and some salt and pepper in a brown paper bag. Shake the lamb shanks in the bag until they are all heavily coated with the flour mixture.

Add a dash of vegetable oil to a large frying pan set over a medium-high heat. Put the lamb shanks into the pan and turn them until they are well browned, then transfer them to an over-proof casserole dish. Put the juice of two lemons into the frying pan, scrape up all the meat residues and add to the casserole.

5 p.m.: Cover the casserole and place it in the preheated oven.

5:30 p.m.: Peel the sweet potatoes, cut them into thirds and add them to the meat.

6 p.m.: A final addition to the pot: the green beans and the juice of a third lemon. Re-cover the casserole and return to oven.

6:30 p.m.: Rinse and slice the tomatoes and serve them with the pesto. Check the casserole. The sweet potatoes should be soft, easily pierced by a fork. The lamb shanks should be tender, cooked to the point where the meat comes easily from the bone. Serve each helping with plenty of the vegetables and drippings.

Who was it who said, "You can't go home again?" Well, you can — but remember to bring money. The other day when I went back to cook this old survival favorite, I found the failiar sign, "Lamb Shanks," beside a brand new price tag: "$1.39 a pound." It seems that even the cost of survival has gone up.

Watercress leaves make a beautiful and tasty garnish. And the stems? Mince and add to vegetables and omelettes for colour and zesty flavour.

Classic puddings are simple

hilda beastall

Just in time for recipes to be kind to after-Christmas food budgets came an idea gleaned from a forecasting trend for the 80's

It seems that a survey of partygoers in eastern cities shows they are becoming bored with entertaining as it has developed there (who wouldn't?) and now look for something different.

One prominent partygoer suggests there will be a return to the more simple types of foods — particularly at parties. So those of us who have never reached the height of sophisticated eating can now find companionship in our enjoyment of simple fare, and even provide recipes and hints to others for such foods as Bread Pudding, Brown Betty Pudding, Rice Pudding and possibly even Macaroni Pudding.

No longer will we be labelled "fads" because we show signs of enjoying these delicacies, they will be fashionable.

Perhaps too the reason the forecasters are talking about a trend to these and similar foods is a matter of economy. If so they are on the same track as many local homemakers who will never make the headlines.

They have however already determined to take a stand on producing good meals at sensible prices in relation to current increasing costs.

As a beginning for 1980 recipes, let us look at preventing waste of bread while creating a delicious, nutritious and inexpensive dessert which may become a favorite winter and fall dish in almost any home. There will be odd slices or crusts of bread of perhaps more than one kind that never find a practical use in some homes. Any pieces of stale cake or muffins are also acceptable in the mix.

BREAD PUDDING WITH APPLES

750 mL wholewheat bread crusts (see NOTE below)
45 mL soft margarine
1 L peeled apples, small chunks (about 3 large apples)
30 mL sugar
1 mL ground ginger and nutmeg mixed
125 mL water
juice of half lemon

Melt margarine in saucepan; add bread crumbs. Stir to coat, remove from heat.

Note: If using white bread, or cake or muffins of white flour, add 15 mL wheat germ and 15 mL wheat bran to give flavor and a little roughage.

In separate bowl mix prepared apples with sugar, spices, water and lemon juice.

Lightly grease a 1 L casserole. Put layer of crumbs in bottom, top with half apple mix, then another layer of crumbs; end with apples.

Bake, covered, in warm 160 deg. C oven for about 1 hour. Remove lid and brown top (if needed) for 15 minutes.

Serve either hot, warm or cold. Delicious all ways. About 6 servings.

An almost forgotten use for rice is to make a Baked Rice Pudding with Dates. Use brown rice for extra flavor and nutrients. The dates lessen the amount of commercial sugar to minimum. Plumped raisins could be used in place of dates for a change — or peaches canned in their own juice poured over plain rice pudding for another variation.

BAKED RICE PUDDING WITH DATES

125 mL raw brown rice
250 mL cold water
125 mL cut-up dates
15 mL sugar
1 mL salt
500 mL hot water
200 mL skim milk powder
25 mL soft margarine

Cook rice in water briskly for 20 minutes. Remove from heat, add dates, sugar, salt and stir will. Set aside.

Grease a 1.5 L casserole. Spoon im mixture.

Add and stir in milk powder, adding hot water gradually to mix all together.

Drop small pieces of soft margarine over top, and sprinkle a little powdered ginger (or grated root ginger) if liked.

Cover and bake in moderate oven 180 deg. C until gently bubbling, then reduce to warm 160 deg. C until liquid is almost absorbed and top is browning; remove cover for 15 minutes if browning is insufficient. Oven heats vary.

This rice with dates is at its best straight from the oven. A leftover portion can be enjoyed at room temperature.

Today's third pudding recipe is another oldie from the early days of this century, a simple Cottage Pudding. As will be seen, it can be easily transformed into a Cottage Fruit Pudding for an interesting and complete change.

COTTAGE PUDDING

30 mL soft margarine
10 mL sugar
2 small eggs (separated)
250 mL milk from skim powder
350 mL unbleached flour
10 mL wheat germ
10 mL wheat bran
5 mL baking powder
1 mL salt

Cream margarine in mixing bowl, add sugar.

Beat yolks of eggs, add to mixture, beating well. Stir in milk alternately with all remaining dry ingredients. Fold in stiffly beaten egg white. Spoon into greased 1 L casserole.

Bake in moderate 180 deg. C oven for about 20 minutes until lightly brown and a clean knife comes out clean.

Serve with a sauce made with lemon juice or orange juice.

COTTAGE FRUIT PUDDING

Cooked mixed dried fruit or prunes to half fill a 1.5 L dish.

Cake batter as in Cottage Pudding above.

Spoon batter over cooked fruit, having some of the juice in bottom of casserole.

Bake in moderate 180 deg. C oven for about 20 minutes.

Serve hot or warm with the fruit as a sauce.

In place of cooked dried fruits you may have frozen home-grown berries. These will indeed make this pudding a real family treat.

Homemakers who make a career out of running the complex system of a home, will find these old-time puddings fit into hot midday meals for school youngsters. During winter months they need only the single addition of a homemade soup.

Each day would bring a different combination of soup and pudding; the youngsters would always smell something good cooking as they came in and that would be part of your reward for making time to prepare noon lunch for their enjoyment.

Try the recipes this month while the year is new.

Fine eclair can be made at home

craig claiborne

There are subtle but delectable fashions in many of the world's foods. Twenty years ago, for example, one of the favorite pastries in every fine pastry shop in North America was the eclair. Here's my version.

ECLAIRS

8 tablespoons butter plus additional butter for greasing a pan
1 cup flour plus additional flour for flouring a pan
1 cup water
Salt
½ teaspoon sugar
4 whole, large eggs

1. Preheat oven to 425 degrees.

2. Lightly but thoroughly butter a jelly-roll pan. Sprinkle the pan with flour and shake it around until well coated. Shake and tap out excess flour.

3. Add the water to a saucepan and add the eight tablespoons butter, salt to taste and sugar. Bring to the boil and add one cup of flour, all at once, stirring vigorously and thoroughly in a circular fashion until a ball is formed and the mixture cleans the sides of the saucepan.

4. Add the eggs, one at a time, beating thoroughly and rapidly with the spoon until each egg is well blended with the mixture. When all the eggs are added, outfit a pastry bag with a No. 8 pastry tube.

5. Spoon the mixture into the bag. Hold the pastry bag at a slight angle to the buttered and floured jelly-roll pan. Pipe out the mixture in a straight line about five inches long, drawing the bag toward you as you pipe. There should be about 12 unbaked eclairs.

6. Place the pan in the oven and bake 15 minutes.

Yield: About 12 eclairs.

ECLAIRS WITH TWO FLAVORS

12 eclairs (see recipe)
2½ cups pastry cream (see recipe for creme patisserie)
2 ounces semisweet chocolate, grated
1 tablespoon instant coffee
Chocolate frosting (see recipe)
Mocha frosting (see recipe)

1. Prepare the eclairs and the pastry cream.

2. Divide the hot pastry cream into two batches.

3. Add the grated chocolate to one batch and stir until the chocolate is melted and smooth. This is a chocolate pastry cream. Set aside.

4. Add the instant coffee to the second batch of pastry cream. Beat well to blend. This is a mocha pastry cream. Set aside.

5. Outfit two pastry bags with two No. 6 pastry tubes.

6. Using a sharp knife, make a slit down one side of each eclair.

7. Fill one pastry bag with the chocolate pastry cream. Pipe the pastry cream to fill the centre of six of the eclairs.

8. Fill the other pastry bag with mocha pastry cream. Pipe the pastry cream to fill the centre of the remaining eclairs.

9. Arrange the filled eclairs on a rack or racks.

10. Spoon the chocolate frosting over the tops of the chocolate-filled eclairs. Let some of the frosting run down the sides. Chill.

11. Spoon the mocha frosting over the remaining eclairs, letting the frosting run down the sides. Chill.

MOCHA FROSTING

2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon instant coffee
½ cup confectioners' sugar
1 tablespoon heavy cream

1. Melt the butter in a small saucepan and stir in the instant coffee and confectioners' sugar.

2. Stir briskly with a wire whisk. Add the cream and beat to blend. Let cool slightly to thicken before using.

CREME PATISSERIE
(Pastry Cream)

2 cups milk
½ vanilla bean or 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
⅔ cup granulated sugar
6 egg yolks
4 tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon soft butter, optional

1. Place the milk and split vanilla bean, if used, in a saucepan and bring to the boil. Cover and keep hot.

2. Put the sugar and egg yolks into a mixing bowl and beat with a wire whisk (this may be done with a mixer) until the mixture is golden yellow and forms a ribbon. Using the whisk, stir in the cornstarch.

3. Strain the hot milk into the egg and sugar mixture, beating constantly with the whisk.

4. Pour the mixture back into the saucepan and bring to the boil, stirring constantly with the whisk. Cook for one minute, stirring vigorously. Add the vanilla extract, if used. If the pastry cream is not to be used immediately, rub the surface with butter to prevent a skin from forming as it cools.

Pizza pleases nearly all

By PATRICIA WELLS
New York Times

Pizza, along with fried chicken and the hamburger, stands as one of North America's favorite fast foods. Universally appealing, it's a dish that transcends age, class and nationality, finding favor among bona-fide junk-food eaters as well as those who would rather die than raise an unhealthy calorie to their lips.

At its best, pizza is a gustatory staple, a salute to simplicity. Few foods compare to a fresh, fragrant pizza pie, with a crisp and crusty dough topped by sweet plum tomatoes and an abundant sprinkling of lightly salted mozzarella, a careful composition of thinly sliced, woodsy mushrooms, zesty rounds of pepperoni, enveloped in a thin, crusty dough the hue of burnt umber.

Nutritionally, pizza can offer a fine balance of protein, fat and carbohydrates, and is rich in calcium and several essential nutrients. An average wedge of cheese pizza supplies about 250 calories and one-fourth the daily protein requirement.

At its worst, pizza is a culinary disaster. Cardboardy, greasy, salty, rubbery, soupy, synthetic, soggy and stringy are just a few of the pejoratives hurled at pizza impostors. Nutritionally, pizza can be a low-salt dieter's nightmare, smothered with sodium-saturated sausage, anchovies, capers and highly salted cheese. A single wedge of cheese pizza provides from 20 to 50 percent of the recommended daily consumption of sodium, but when you add other high-sodium toppings, even a single slice can bring the sodium level well above recommended levels.

Since the 1950s, when pizza was still considered a novelty ethnic food limited to Italian neighborhoods, small town taverns and back street bistros, the pizza business has blossomed into a pizza industry. America's main streets and back roads are now studded with more than 25,000 pizza restaurants, while frozen pizzas account for some 11 percent of all supermarket-purchased frozen foods.

Pizza also makes up one of the fastest growing segments of the American food industry, with sales expanding 10 to 15 percent each year. What promoters have succeeded in creating is a taste for pizza that only another pizza will satisfy.

Although people may settle for a universally consistent hamburger that tastes the same from town to town, they have firm, fixed opinons about their pizza.

The Dallas version is topped with hamburger. In Seattle and Portland, Canadian bacon is preferred, and in New Haven, you can find a version of "white pizza," a thick, yeasty dough covered with white clam sauce.

There are no secrets to preparing the perfect pizza, but there are steps that should be followed.

Here are a few suggestions:

— To obtain a perfectly crisp but not dry crust, pizza should be baked at a very high temperature on a heat-retaining clay baking tile, similar to the stone surfaces that line the floor of professional pizza ovens. When pizza is baked on such a surface, the heat actually rises up from the stone, baking first the dough, then the tomato and finally melting the cheese. The high heat permits quick baking, so the pizza never dries out. The clay also allows the pizza to breathe, thus avoiding a buildup of moisture that causes crust sogginess. And, since the dough cooks first, it absorbs little of the topping that could make a soggy pizza. Always begin with a cold stone in a cold oven, then preheat both before baking.

— Simplicity is the key to good pizza. Fresh tomatoes and mozzarella make the best topping. Although variations are unlimited, avoid the tendency to overload the pizza. Be sparing in the use of strongly flavored ingredients such as anchovies, olives and capers.

— People on low-sodium diets need not avoid pizza altogether. Salt can be deleted from the dough and unsalted mozzarella is available at many Italian specialty stores. Herbs, such as fennel and rosemary, and hot red pepper flakes do much to enhance flavor.

— For pizza-making, unhomogenized mozzarella that has aged a few days is best. Absolutely fresh mozzarella (that which is purchased the day it is made) has too much liquid and will not break down evenly as it melts. For best results, buy it fresh and let it age a few days in the refrigerator. Most mozzarella found in supermarkets is homogenized, and tends to get stringy and rubbery as it cooks. Unhomogenized mozzarella is slightly yellow, while the homogenized variety is almost perfectly white.

Soviet threat? He'll dig that hole

EDMONTON (CP) — The Cuban missile crisis ended before Lance Weatherill could build his bomb shelter.

But the shingler from nearby Winterburn says he is convinced the Soviet Union "can't be stopped except with fighting" and does not intend to let international accord interfere with his construction plans again.

He is seeking about 20 other Alberta families to join him in the construction of a secret bunker somewhere under the peaceful surface of a farm. It's the practical thing to do, he said in an interview.

"Families buy life insurance, don't they? Well, insurance won't do anybody a bit of good in the case of nuclear war. A bomb shelter will."

Weatherill abandoned plans for a "hole in the ground" near the North Saskatchewan River when the Cuban crisis cooled off in late 1962. This time he envisions something more complex, a shelter that won't be elaborate but will be big.

"With fallout, we won't be able to plant for a year or two. So the shelter will have to be large enough to accommodate 20 families plus all the food and equipment they'll need for that amount of time."

Hope of collecting down the drain

EDMONTON (CP) — Rev. B.W. Oakley doesn't stand much of a chance of getting money from Edmonton, Alta., for the renovation of toilets in a girls' school in Edmonton, England.

Council's economic affairs committee has recommended that Oakley's request for a grant be denied.

The law department advised the committee the grant would be illegal because it doesn't fall within the scope of council's policy on civic grants.

The committee decided against recommending that any money be given to Oakley's project from council's contingency fund.

Oakley, the parish priest at All Saints Church in Edmonton, England, asked council in a letter to consider a donation toward the $16,000 needed to replace 102-year-old toilets in the Edmonton Girls' Charity School.

Built in 1784, the school is being preserved as part of the English borough's history.

Oakley said in his letter that the school "could well have educated some of the initial settlers in your city."

Twisters deadly

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — An official of the National Forecast Centre says 8,560 tornadoes killed 986 Americans during the last decade — and more people may be killed by twisters in the 1980s. Deputy Director Fred Ostby said the chances of death increase with the spread of population centres. Figures compiled by the center show that Texas was most often hit by the tornadoes — [illegible] killed 137.

Hides on sale

WINNIPEG (CP) — The hides of 21 polar bears killed in Churchill by provincial conservation officers will be sold in Winnipeg later this month.

A government official said the hides came from bears who pass through the Churchill area each fall as they migrate north to Hudson Bay.

David Duncan, a spokesman for the natural resources department, said some of the bears are "nuisance animals" attracted by local refuse dumps.

Duncan said the bears are usually tagged and set free outside Churchill, but a few return and must be killed when they threaten lives and property.

It took three years to collect the hides which are expected to sell by tender for $500 to $1,000 each. Any profits will go to the government.

Residents rebel

TWO HILLS, Alta. (CP) — Two Hills residents are rebelling against their Chamber of Commerce and town council for endorsing a proposal to build a hazardous wastes disposal plant near the community, 158 kilometres northeast of Edmonton.

Concerned Citizens About Contaminants, a protest group headed by Victor Chrapko, marched on town council armed with briefs and angry words to try to halt plans by Kinetic Contaminants Ltd. of Edmonton to build the plant.

Many of the 20 protesters reminded apologetic town councillors that a municipal election is expected this fall and their jobs may be on the line.

Blow to Churchill

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba Farm Bureau has rejected proposals to improve the grain terminal at the northern Manitoba port of Churchill.

Delegates at a weekend annual meeting defeated a resolution calling for improvements to the port, in effect spurning Churchill as a viable port for grain export trade.

The vote came after sharp criticism of Churchill as a grain exporting point by Jim Deveson, president of Manitoba Pool Elevators.

Sleep on dear good mother, it has been long years

Since you left our hearts filled with sadness and tears

Yours was a heart that was blithesome
and gay

Scattering sunshine all along the way

You know how we love you
love you yet

Though God took you from us,
we cannot forget.

Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were lower in active trading on the Canadian bond market Tuesday as the price of gold hit record highs.

The short end of the market was unchanged. Mid-, long-term, and provincial issues were down three-eighths of a point. Corporates dropped one-quarter.

Day-to-day money was available at 13¾ per cent.

The main reason for the weakness continued to be the unsettled international situation, which shows no early sign of settlement, an analyst at McLeod Young and Weir Ltd. said.

Trees on home site worth preserving

With the continuing disappearance of native trees and their undergrowth due to the spread of population, every building contractor and home builder has a responsibility to conserve what is possible. At the same time, the finished home appearance gains in value from having a natural feature as part of the picture.

Initial action should be taken by the owner of the property where building is taking place, the contractor must be given warning on avoiding damage to certain trees or areas of underbrush, and the owner must be aware that the job may be slowed down by restrictions.

It takes time and man-hours to haul materials in small quantities instead of dumping truckloads just near the foundation site.

This is why the property owner needs to get together with the builder before work begins, even before the final site on the lot is chosen for the building. A special tree or two can be tentatively selected for saving and marked with a sizeable piece of yellow material at eye level. There may be Arbutus, Douglas-fir or Garry-oak. An area of underbrush may contain Salal, Oregon-grape, wild-rose or ferns.

It is heartwarming to see specimen trees painstakingly preserved during building operations with a rough wood guard as a warning to machine operators.

Even so, trees have roots damaged by a grading machine, and compaction of soil by frequent passing of trucks.

Many fine feeding roots of trees are quite near the surface and radiate outwards to the drip edge of the foliage. Compaction results in restricting air supply to the roots.

Worse than having soil packed however, is for trees to have extra soil filled in deeply over the root area and around the lower portion of the trunks. Many native trees in home garden areas die from this cause within the first few years of alterations in soil level.

If a change of level must be made, either raising or lowering, it is vital to the tree to maintain the present soil level over its root area. When filling must be done, construct a "well" around the trunk, at a distance of no less than three feet all around. Large stones hold back surrounding soil. They are better without mortar or cement.

With the normal continuing exposure, the trunk bark will be able to expand with age.

Depth of the well depends on filling to be done in the area. Should lowering of soil level be necessary, a gradual mound or slope must be maintained from the foot of the tree to as great a distance as possible. Here again, stones laid into the mound will keep soil in place. Or the mound may be covered at once with grass sod to prevent erosion and root exposure.

In addition to these preventive measures, a safety measure to prevent dumping of lime-based material such as plaster, concrete and stucco should be advised. Lime in any form spells death to native plant material, also to such popular plants as rhododendrons and camellias.

These preventive measures may seem a lot of extra work and perhaps added cost, but our native trees and the underbrush, are worth the time and effort to preserve them around the homes of the future.

It is foreseeable that only those carefully attended on private home property will survive outside of officially designated conservation areas.

Slump hits foresters

Nearly 8,000 B.C. forest industry employees are still off the job as slumping lumber markets have resulted in extended seasonal shutdowns of mills and logging operations.

About 450 workers in the Greater Victoria area are still out and further up Island — from the Malahat to Parksville — somewhere between 1,700 and 1,800 are idle.

A spokesman for the International Woodworkers of America's regional office in Vancouver said the "picture is not too rosy."

He said about 3,000 workers went back to work after the Christmas-New Years shutdown leaving roughly 8,000 still laid off.

Normally about two-thirds of the forest industry workers go back after the holiday period but this year only one-third did, he said.

"This confirms the very serious view that we have taken of the situation."

The IWA spokesman said it is difficult at this time to assess just what effect the government's new low interest mortgage scheme will have on the unemployment situation.

So far, he said, a plywood plant in Richmond has started up on the basis that the scheme will stimulate housing and produce a demand for the company's product.

Roger Lewis, president of the IWA's 1,800-member Victoria local, said about 80 or 90 employees at Sooke Forest Products are laid off, about 175 are out at Victoria Plywood and another 200 loggers are still not back to work.

He said the layoff figures are higher than they would normally be at this time of the year.

Lewis said he doesn't think the government's mortgage plan will have too dramatic an effect on the local jobless situation except perhaps in the construction industry.

A Victoria Plywood spokesman said there is one shift operating at the present, employing about 35 people.

He said it is still too early to tell when the plant will be back to full operation, perhaps toward the end of the month or in early February.

ICY GRIP: Huge ice floes hem in South Korean stern trawler Gae Yang Ho near St. Matthew Island in Bering Sea. Gae Yang Ho and South Korean cargo vessel Gae Cheog No. 2 have been locked in since Sunday but ice-breaking U.S. Coast Guard cutter Storis should be able to free vessels, officials said Tuesday. If necessary, 140 persons aboard the two ships will be rescued.

Chappaquiddick conflict

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senator Edward Kennedy says he knew the issue of Chappaquiddick would be raised if he ran for president, "but I also knew there would be nothing new that could come up that would question my testimony because the way I testified is the way it happened."

Less than a week before his presidential bid faces its first popular test in Iowa, Kennedy's account of the fatal automobile accident a decade ago has been challenged again — this time by two major publications.

As Kennedy set off on a campaign swing through New England Tuesday evening, having delayed his departure to discuss the latest reports with a group of reporters, he sought to explain the enduring nature of the Chappaquiddick story.

"There's a natural curiosity about incidents that affect peoples' lives, which I understand," said the Massachusetts Democrat. "There's a curiosity about this tragedy. There's a curiosity about other tragedies that have affected my life. I understand that.

"But we'll continue to conduct the campaign, talk about these questions and also present our views on the matters of vital importance to this country."

The latest reports, Kennedy said at a briefing called to discuss in detail separate investigative reports published by the Washington Star and Reader's Digest, were not only inaccurate but contradicted each other.

The senator assembled a group of three experts — two admiralty lawyers and an oceanographic engineer — to challenge the reports questioning Kennedy's testimony about his swim from Chappaquiddick Island to Edgartown on nearby Martha's Vineyard after his car plunged off a bridge. Mary Jo Kopechne, 29, was killed in the July, 1969, accident.

Kennedy said The Star story, in particular, "is wrong, is wrong, is dead wrong."

The newspaper reported that because a natural channel between the two islands had largely silted in by the time the accident occurred in July, 1969, the tidal currents Kennedy described under oath actually would have been carrying him in the opposite direction from that to which he testified.

The Digest, which hired a consultant to test the tidal current in the area where Kennedy said he swam the harbor channel, concluded the current likely was slack or weak at the time Kennedy said he feared it would pull him out to sea.

Designers drove Pintos: Ford

WINAMAC, Ind. (AP) — Lawyers for the Ford Motor Co. say they will counter prosecution charges that Ford "chose profit over human life" in designing its Pinto model with testimony from engineers of the car who bought the sub-compact for themselves, their wives and children.

Ford is charged with three counts of reckless homicide in the fiery crash of a 1973 Pinto that exploded when hit from behind by a van in August, 1978. Three young women died in the accident.

After more than a week of preliminaries, the prosecution today begins presenting witnesses in Pulaski Circuit Court.

The trial is the first criminal prosecution of a manufacturer in a products-defects case.

In his opening statement to the jury Tuesday, prosecutor Michael Cosentino accused Ford of selling Pintos while knowing the car's fuel system was likely to explode in rear-end collisions. He said Ford refused to alter the system "for the sole reason that they would save money by not doing so."

Ford lawyer James Neal said his witnesses during the trial, which is expected to last two months, will include "the very engineers who designed and manufactured the Pinto."

Pipe fight to court

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — Northern Tier Pipeline Co. has gone to court in an effort to overturn a Clallam County shoreline management plan that could scuttle plans for establishment of an oil port at Port Angeles.

An amendment to the plan, which specifically outlaws creation of an oil port in the county, was approved by county commissioners in December, 1978, but not ratified by the state Department of Ecology until last month.

Northern Tier, which is seeking a permit to build an oil port on Ediz Hook in Port Angeles Harbor and a pipeline that would run to Clearbrook, Minn., filed the suit in Thurston County Superior Court.

In its complaint, Northern Tier contends the county should have filed an environmental impact statement before adopting the amendment.

Northern Tier also argues that the amendment is "exclusionary to a single type of activity and is thus illegal."

Northern Tier attorney Gordon Conger said the firm believes that the state Energy Facility Site Evaluation Council has the authority to override the amendment and that the suit was filed simply as a "fall back position."

A contested case hearing on the Northern Tier proposal began in Olympia Jan. 3 and is expected to last about eight months.

Big Soviet lead in arms spending

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new CIA report says Russian defense spending during the 1970s surpassed that of the United States by a wide margin and probably will continue to do so.

The Soviet Union spent about 30 per cent more than the United States for defence during the last decade, said the report released Tuesday by the House Armed Services Committee.

"The pattern was one of continuous growth throughout the decade," the CIA said.

"In contrast, the trend in U.S. outlays was downward for most of the period," until 1976 when the trend showed increases in procurement, research and development, and operation and maintenance, but declines persisted in military personnel and construction."

"Evidence on weapon systems currently in production at major defence industries plants, and the increasing costs of modern weapons indicate that this long-term trend in Soviet defence activities will continue into the 1980s at about the same rate of growth," the report said.

The study paper presents estimates of "what it would cost to produce and man in the United States a military force of the same size and with the same weapons inventory as that of the U.S.S.R. and to operate that force as the Soviets do," the report said.

"The estimated dollar costs of Soviet defence activities caught up with U.S. defense outlays in 1971 and exceeded them by a widening margin through 1979," it said. "In 1979 the Soviet total was about $165 billion, approximately 50 per cent higher than the U.S. total of $108 billion."

Detox bid by Elvis: doctor

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Elvis Presley underwent drug detoxification on two occasions before his death, and harmless placebos often were given to keep the entertainer's drug problems under control, his physician says.

Dr. George Nichopoulos, testifying Tuesday during a malpractice hearing that might result in loss of his medical licence, also told the Tennessee Board of Medical Examiners that he packed three suitcases full of drugs and medical equipment whenever Presley went on a concert tour.

Nichopoulos is accused of illegally dispensing about 10,000 pills — painkillers, sedatives, amphetamines and barbiturates — to Presley between Jan. 1, 1976, and the singer's death on Aug. 16, 1977.

Presley's death was attributed to a heart attack, but some news reports have said it may have been drug related.

Neither the cause of death nor the reason Presley sought painkillers was raised during Tuesday's testimony.

The doctor admitted writing the prescriptions, but he said many of the pills obtained through those written in Presley's name were actually dispensed to members of his touring group.

Nichopoulos admitted over-prescribing drugs such as the sedative Quaalude for some patients, but he blamed the error on problems in record keeping.

Soviets dig in for long stay

Thousands of Soviet trucks carrying coal, firewood and arms began pouring into Afghanistan today as the 15-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting in Brussels reached broad agreement on measures to retaliate against Russia until it removes its military forces.

The trucks rolled over pontoon bridges today in a massive effort to provision Russian invasion troops for a winter stay, Moslem rebels said.

Rebel leaders near Pakistan's border with Afghanistan said the Russians put up pontoon bridges at the river port of Hairatan over the Amu River on the Afghan-Soviet border.

Thousands of trucks started rolling last week across the bridges into Afghanistan, carrying huge amounts of coal, firewood and other winter supplies necessary to keep an army warm in the harsh Afghan climate.

Most of the trucks have been covered, however, and the rebels say they suspect some are carrying arms and ammunition for the estimated 85,000 Soviet invasion troops and 56,000 Afghan government forces fighting Moslem guerrillas.

In Brussels, a strong consensus quickly emerged at a four-hour special session of the NATO permanent council for tougher and more concerted reprisals against Moscow than had seemed likely even a week ago.

It was decided to restrict credits, subsidies, agricultural shipments, high technology exports and cultural and official contacts with the Russians, with even the French going along with the general NATO approach.

At the same time, foreign ministers attending their regular monthly meeting of the European Common Market issued a statement condemning the Soviet Union for "flagrant interference in the internal affairs" of Afghanistan and rejected Moscow's explanation of its invasion there.

Moreover, at least half a dozen NATO delegates at the meeting also said that they were prepared to consider seeing what could be done to move the 1980 Olympic Games out of Moscow. This, too, looked like a non-starter in Europe a week ago, but both public and government opinion are hardening against the Soviets.

Detailed discussions will take place in the next few days, primarily in Paris, to complete a new upgrading of the so-called "Cocom list" of prohibited exports to the Soviet Union. The list has existed since around 1951, but has been progressively relaxed in this past decade of detente. Now many items, such as sophisticated computers and high technology industrial equipment will be put back on.

In Washington, the administration is discussing several proposals to deny Moscow the Olympic Games.

The New York Daily News reported in today's editions the United States' first choice was to have the Games moved out of Moscow. The News reported that if that failed, officials said the United States was willing to subsidize "counter-Olympics" elsewhere, possibly Montreal.

But in New York today the president of the U.S. Olympic Committee said that the United States should look for alternatives to a Games boycott.

The comments by committee president Robert Kane followed a New York Times interview in which State Sec-

Nuclear war threat triggers worry here

The growing tension between the U.S. and the Soviet Union over Afghanistan has triggered a rash of calls to emergency planners from Victorians worried that the worsening international situation could mean a nuclear war.

A spokesman for Emergency Planning Canada at 816 Government Street says about a half-dozen calls a day are coming in from people who want to know what to do in case of nuclear war.

Pamphlets containing information on what to do in the event of war are available from the EPC office.

But this morning, the principal publication, 11 Steps to Survival, was out of stock.

"We've asked the provincial emergency people for some," the spokesman said.

"We should have them by this afternoon."

It appears that Victorians aren't the only people anxious for information.

While there isn't mass panic across the nation, the demand for data is steady across the country.

In Winnipeg for example, Nels Stavenjord, deputy co-ordinator of the Manitoba Emergency Measures Organization, says his group has been getting 10 to 12 requests a day from people worried about what to do.

As a result, he has been mailing out pamphlets dealing with nuclear attack "like they were going out of style."

He said most of the callers appear to be mothers with young children, judging from the noise in the background.

The EPC people here will on request mail you the survival book as well as a publication on how to build a basement fallout shelter.

Khomeini switches on Waldheim: ABC

Times News Services

Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has agreed to allow UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim to mediate the hostage situation in Tehran, ABC News has reported.

The report Tuesday, citing informed sources at the United Nations, said Khomeini has sent a message through Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh stating Iran would now accept Waldheim as an intermediary.

But UN sources told UPI Waldheim had not received any communications from Iran since Sunday.

Earlier this month, Khomeini refused to see Waldheim when the secretary-general visited Iran in an effort to resolve in the crisis. The ABC report did not say what changed Khomeini's mind.

UN officials admit there have been a lot of conflicting signals from Iran, "but (they) feel this one is serious," ABC said.

Although Khomeini would not see Waldheim and Iranian militants denounced him a U.S. tool, the Iranians "now seem ready to talk to Waldheim," the ABC report said.

Meanwhile, Iranian Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinfar said today Iran is prepared to drop its oil production to as little as 1.5 million barrels a day, about half the current output, if Western Europe and Japan join in economic sanctions against it.

Referring to the possibility of sanctions by countries other than the United States,

Tories pour oil on fears

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — Progressive Conservative campaign strategists jumped into action Tuesday to prevent potential damage from statements by Finance Minister John Crosbie that oil prices could rise even higher this year than was earlier announced.

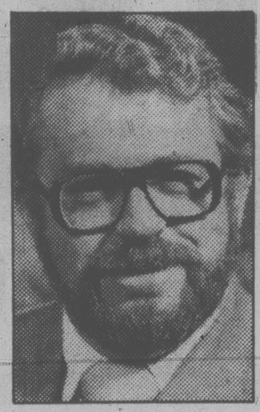
News of Crosbie's statement, published Tuesday in an interview with the Montreal Gazette, reached Prime Minister Clark's campaign bus during a tour of southern Ontario's Niagara peninsula, a region where Conservative energy policies already are considered unpopular and could give the party difficulty at the polls Feb. 18.

"I'm not contemplating an increase in oil prices," Clark said later.

Today in Newfoundland, Crosbie said he agrees with Clark on oil price increases.

"We're cheek to cheek, toe to toe, eye to eye and bum to bum on oil prices," Crosbie said in an interview from Gander where he was attending a Progressive Conservative meeting.

Rafe's legal at last



MAIR
. . . no longer Ralph

Health Minister Rafe Mair has finally decided to go honest and change his name to Rafe Mair.

For all his 52 years, he has legally been a Ralph, not a Rafe.

Mair explains: "I was christened Kenneth Ralph, but the Ralph is pronounced Rafe, as they do in England and Scotland. For example, Sir Ralph Richardson, the actor, pronounces his name Rafe.

"When I went to school the teachers all called me Ralph and I'd been used to being called Rafe. So I marched home and announed to my mother I had changed the spelling to R-a-f-e."

This week Mair began the process of changing the spelling legally.

He says he had wanted to do it for years and was reminded of it when he was familiarizing himself with the Vital Statistics department of his new ministry.

"I've always felt more of a Rafe than a Ralph," he says. "Ralph is the sound dogs make."

Mair says all his life, including the past four years as a cabinet minister, he's been signing documents with the signature, K. Rafe Mair.

But he says that isn't illegal, "as long as I'm not trying to pass myself off as something I'm not."

'They didn't do a thing'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A single phone call on Christmas Day could have saved the 30 Taiwanese crew members on board the freighter Lee Wang Zin, a marine pilot said Tuesday.

Capt. Bob Fisher told a coroner's inquest that the Canadian Coast Goard could have plotted the freighter's position if it had phoned the Pacific Pilotage Authority in Vancouver for its course and speed as soon as the S O S was received. He was the last man to leave the freighter before it capsized in a fierce storm off the north tip of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

But, three hours after the S O S, the coast guard was still trying to locate the vessel, Fisher said.

"They didn't phone me. I finally phoned them. They didn't do a thing. They wound up with a salvage operation."

Fisher said he first heard the Lee Wang Zin was in trouble at 10:30 Christmas morning, 73 minutes after the distress call was radioed. He immediately phoned the coast guard for information, and told them to look for the ship near Rose Spit at the northeast corner of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

He was told rescue helicopters were being sent from Juneau, Alaska, and Victoria.

"That was another unbelievable thing because of the distances involved," he said.

Fisher said he phoned the coast guard again at 11:30 a.m. and was told a helicopter was en route from Prince Rupert, about 50 kilometres east of the capsized ship.

Coroner Hal Murphy, who described Fisher as "the last living survivor of that ship" asked him if he had a personal opinion why the ship capsized.

"No I don't," he replied. "None whatsoever."

The coast guard's preliminary inquiry determined the most probable cause of the disaster was that the Lee Wang Zin hit Celestial Reef in Dixon Entrace, was holed port and starboard and took on water, causing her to suddenly turn turtle.

Gold going crazy

Gold rocketed through the $700 barrier in Europe today in an "absolutely crazy" market opening at $735 and later surged to $765 ($887 Canadian) at the London morning gold fixing as the price leap-frogged around the world.

Gold earlier hit record levels in New York, Hong Kong and Zurich but the London morning fixing of $765 eclipsed them all. It was an increase of $78 from the London closing price on Tuesday.

The price of gold is "fixed" each morning and afternoon in London by a meeting of the five principal dealers who gather to set a price on gold.

"Trading is hectic. We are rushed off our feet. Little time to talk," a dealer for brokers Samuel Montagu said.

The spectacular leap was attributed to a comment by U.S. Treasury Secretary William Miller that further U.S. gold auctions were not appropriate at the moment because of the unsettled bullion market. Traders interpreted this as a squeeze on already tight supplies of gold.

Lottery tickets foil sneaky x-ray peeks

X-raying lottery tickets to pick out instant prizes may work in England but the technique draws a blank with Provincial lottery tickets.

According to U.K. scientist Duncan Stewart, rigging a lottery win is easy with a little scientific knowledge, including the use of x-rays to detect instant-prize tickets through their protective seal.

The Times borrowed the services of a friendly technician Tuesday to x-ray a Provincial ticket which contains a scratch-and-win type patch which can pay off with prizes ranging from $5 to $1,000.

The x-ray showed zilch.

The scratch patch remained blank on the film. There wasn't even a trace of what might lie underneath.

Stewart, a physicist with the Fulmer Research Institute in Buckinghamshire, said chemicals applied to tickets may also reveal hidden numbers.

Stewart conducted tests involving security measures for 20 U.K. lotteries, prompting the government to tighten up its system.

"With a little expense, time, trouble and knowledge, anyone can check through a batch of tickets and pick out the winners before they are sold," Stewart claimed.

But not, apparently, with the Provincial.

Guy Simonis, general manager of the Western Canada Lottery Foundation in Winnipeg, told the Times today Provincial tickets have been exposed to x-rays, laser beams and a wide variety of chemicals without success.

He said the tickets are printed by the British American Bank Note Co., printers of currency for countries around the world.

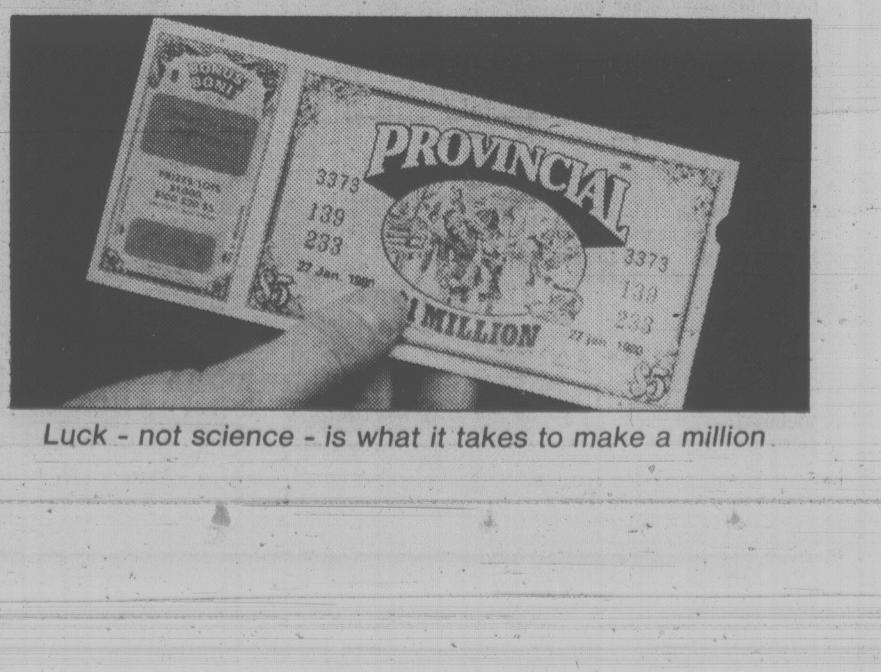
In addition to that company's expertise in foiling counterfeiters, a forensic sciences laboratory in Toronto turned what Simonis termed "a number of honest people with crooked minds" loose on the instant prize patches.

They failed to come up with a simple method of cheating the system, but they did theorize that it would be possible, after expending about $500,000 on equipment, to scratch the protective paint off the hidden message and then print it back on.

But you'd still have to buy a lot of tickets.

The moral?

It's a lot easier being lucky than it is to be crooked.



Luck - not science - is what it takes to make a million
